The Case Hangs on What the Jurers Believe About the Handwriting

This, with the exclusion of the so-called Barnett letters, throws the entire case of the people back on the handwriting experts, and so little faith has the defense in

This is the point which the biggest experts in the country have been summoned to prove, and now the defense has conceded it. From now on the people's experts will bend all their energies to showing that Molineux is the author of all the writings. Meanwhile the defense has taken another important step. There was a conference of Molineux's counsel on Thursday night, at which General Molineux and David N. Wine of Cardui is better than any doctor or any other medicine for suffering women. Its healing properties are certainly most remarkable I suffered for three months with suppressed menstruation about two years ago. I began by losing my general good health, lost my appetite and sleep and became nervous and easily exhausted. My menses which had been scanty for some time stopped altogether and shooting pains through the abdomen and back with headache and a general oppressed feeling was what I experienced daily and was unable to continue my work. Medicine failed to relieve me until a friend suggested Wine of Cardui and I bought a bottle to try it. The first bottle relieved me so much that I felt much encouraged. I continued the treatment for five weeks and to my great joy found at the end of that time that I was well and strong, menstruated regularly without pain, in fact felt better than I had for years. I certainly bless your medicine and recommend it to all my friends, some of whom have been helped wonderfully through its use.

Business on next spring's account tends rather to expand, and a similar tendency is noted in retail business, particularly at the torial page of the Boston Journal: east where the fear of a coal famine has been removed by the actual resumption of work. It is true that in the northwest retail trade is not meeting anticipations, possibly because of warmer weather, but partially because 'York. the farming element is still busily engaged in crop work. The money situation shows little that is unfavorable to general business; legitimate trade demands being taken care of to the neglect of the speculative element. The New York stock market is dull and speculative activity has greatly decreased in spite of the easing of money due to the government bond, purchases, while the ending of the coal strike has also failed to stimulate the market. The rise in exchange rates and fears that repayments of loans made abroad to stock market interests will cause gold shipments seem to be the principal reason for the market's hesitation, although the approaching congressional election is looked on as a Johnson, J. There are no features of striking interest in the New York market, and large operators seem to be doing little. The banking interest in fact, appears to discourage any stock market activity.

Government bonds are very strong, as are also high grade securities and state municipal bonds. Speculative issues are, however, somewhat heavy. Foreign exchange has been strong, demand sterling rising to 4.873-4 on a large inquiry to repay loans abroad. There is a very general talk of gold exports in the near future. The exchange market, however, at the end of the week stemed somewhat easier. Bar to 23 5-16 d in London and 50 1-2 higher, the lowest quotations on record.

Fuel supplies do not increase as rapidly as sanguine estimates earlier indicated. This is natural, however, because the men did not generally resume work until the close of this week.
