MR. McDONALD'S TRIAL

Indictment in the Knights of Honor Matter of Three Years Ago

The trial of Mr. Charles C. McDonald on the charge of embezzlement, in that nearly three years ago he failed to make returns as financial reporter of Oak City Lodge, No. 419, to the Supreme Knights of Honor, was begun in the superior court here last afternoon and will be continued today. Both witnesses examined yesterday said that Mr. McDonald had refunded the amount paid by them which he had not turned over to the supreme lodge.

Mr. McDonald is represented by Messrs. Douglass & Simms and Judge Thomas B. Womack, while Solicitor Armistead Jones is prosecuting.

There are three indictments against Mr. McDonald, but all grow out of the same thing. Two charge embezzlement and one is for false pretence.

When the case was called charging Mr. McDonald with the embezzlement of assessments amounting to $500 paid by members of the Knights of Honor, Mr. Douglass, attorney for the accused, moved a continuance because civil suits growing out of the same transaction are now pending before a referee. Judge Peebles overruled the motion and the trial proceeded.

Only two state's witnesses, Mayor A. M. Powell and Mr. R. H. Bradley, were examined yesterday.

Mayor Powell, who had been an officer in the Knights of Honor, testified that the Oak City lodge had long since ceased to hold regular meetings. At the required time a few would get together and hold the necessary session to choose officers. He did not pay Mr. McDonald any money, but deducted his assessments from Mr. McDonald's bill at Jones & Powell's.

Mr. R. H. Bradley was examined at more length. He was a member of the order and was insured for $2,000, as each member was. When Mr. Lambeth died he filled out the blank and took it to Mr. McDonald, the financial reporter, to have the money collected. Mr. McDonald then told him that the Oak City lodge had been suspended because he failed to send on the assessments in time. As to when the lodge was suspended the books would show. Mr. Bradley said this book was given to him and then turned over to the attorney representing the members suing the supreme lodge. He did not know where the book was now. There were about thirty members of the Oak City lodge, but he did not know how many brought suit against the supreme lodge. The witness was the reporter of the local lodge, but his habit was to sign and place the seal on the blank reports and give them to Mr. McDonald to fill out and forward. Oak City lodge was suspended in June, 1900, and the suspension became known in June, 1901. He thought that he made twelve or thirteen payments after the suspension.

On cross-examination by Mr. Douglass the witness said that he was not present at the meeting of the Oak City lodge in January, 1901, but afterwards Mr. McDonald brought him a paper with his (McDonald's) name as financial reporter and treasurer, that being the only change in the officers. No bond was required of the officers.

Here Mr. Douglass read from the constitution of the supreme lodge that subordinate lodges shall require a bond. Mr. Bradley stated that suits were pending brought by members of the suspended lodge to either be reinstated without medical examination or be paid back their assessments with interest. He said a representative of the supreme lodge came to Raleigh and it was thought arranged to reinstate the local members, but the supreme lodge did not adopt the report and said the members must be re-examined by a physician. Mr. McDonald had offered to pay for such examination, but few were willing at their age to try a medical examination again. In reply to a question Mr. Bradley said he understood Mr. McDonald had turned over to Mr. C. M. Busbee, attorney for Mr. Bradley and others suing the supreme lodge, the money he collected from the time the lodge was suspended.

Throughout the examination there were numerous objections and exceptions taken by counsel for the accused.

This morning Mr. N. B. Broughton will be examined.

and is much admired. Tapestry is used on the walls of the reception and reading rooms. The papering in the pool room is exceedingly novel and represents coaching scenes. The ball room on the third floor has been converted into the handsomest in the state. The pillars and supports are in ivory, while the delicate tint on the walls gradually fades away in the arched metallic ceiling into white.

Mr. Davis, who supervised the work, made many friends in Raleigh.

PLEASURES ABOUND AT MOREHEAD CITY

Delightfully Situated and Filled and Surrounded With Many Attractions

Morehead City, N. C., July 15.—Special.—Today the world is flooded with scientific discoveries, inventions and a display of architectural beauty of both private and public buildings. Years of observation justify saying that none have surpassed, if equalled, the grand improvements of the Atlantic Hotel at Morehead City. Its two thousand electric lights, both outside and inside, are surely beautiful, especially the numberless colored gems that light up the splendid ball room, which the band fills with music's sweetest tones, while hundreds of fair damsels, whose cheeks glow with health and eyes sparkle with beauty, with their gallant partners, nightly move gracefully in the dance. I feel wanting in words to tell of the many refined enjoyments at the Atlantic; their equal has not been met at any other summer resort. Look where you may on the water, the surrounding country, the green islands, nursed by the ocean's tides, all are beautiful.

No summer resort on the seacoast of America can boast of being more beautifully located. On both the east and the west sand hills (covered by green shrubbery) shut out the ocean, hence a beautiful water avenue is formed for many miles, upon which hundreds of the finest boats are seen speeding along, "walking the waves like things of life," having ladies and gentlemen and children on board, whose enjoyment is unequalled.

Some persons often venture on the ocean where the waves are sometimes rude, and ladies sometimes get "sick of the sea," as old Neptune exacts of them a tribute for venturing on his domain. Here permit me to ask why go north, why go south, why visit the mountains, when Morehead City offers such unsurpassed enjoyments?

It is true that in this section of "beloved Carolina" we have no towering mountains upon which "the sun lingers last," yet we have unequalled a display of Nature's grandeur. The ever restless ocean rolls, wave after wave dashing upon the sandy shores, breaks into millions of sparkling gems, and the wind, sweeping over the mighty water, comes thousands of miles laden with health-giving properties. I say with Byron, "I love the ocean in calm and storm." I know of some at the Atlantic who rise early and are delighted by seeing the glorious sun coming up apparently out of the eastern ocean, throwing aside his golden drapery, and commencing his walk across the heavens. At eve he is seen seemingly going to rest surrounded by a halo of clouds, fringed with purple and gold. Here, too, at Morehead City, no towering buildings shut out the beauties of nature. The silver moon moves across the sky under convoy of the twinkling stars, and no visitor can fail to see the beauty of the great white-headed clouds as they float in their silent grandeur in the heavens, showing a beauty of nature nowhere else to be seen.

I must cease my rambling, and I will only add that the Atlantic management under Mr. Earle Turner and his assistants shows plainly a superiority above that of former management. Guests receive proper attention and order prevails in all respects.
