DEATH OF EX-SPEAKER RANDALL.

A great man has fallen. The people of the entire Union will mourn the death of Pennsylvania's distinguished son, HON. SAMUEL JACKSON RANDALL, who died in Washington Sunday morning at 5 o'clock. He was born in Philadelphia on the 10th day of October, 1828. His father, JOSIAH RANDALL, was a lawyer of eminence in the Quaker city. His mother was the daughter of GENERAL JOSEPH WORRALL, who was a democratic leader and a friend of THOMAS JEFFERSON. His father was a prominent figure in Pennsylvania politics, contributed much to the press and was a member of the legislature. He was first a Democrat—then a HENRY CLAY Whig, and when the Whigs gravitated towards abolition, he went back to his first love and became a Democrat. He never lived to see his distinguished son Speaker of the House, but the late MR. RANDALL's mother, who died in 1880, lived to see her son in that honorable position.

MR. RANDALL received only an academic education—engaged in mercantile pursuits—served four years in the city council of Philadelphia—one year in the State Senate—was a member of the First Troop Philadelphia Cavalry, which was mustered into service May 13th, 1861. He was complimented for his bravery and was made quartermaster of his company, and promoted to the rank of cornet, a position corresponding to that of captain in the army.

MR. RANDALL was first elected to the Thirty-eighth Congress in 1864, and has been re-elected to every succeeding Congress. His service covered a period of over a quarter of a century. He was from the first an industrious member and came to have national prominence from his speech in 1869 against repudiation. He declared that it was political heresy, and that it would place the country in a dishonest attitude before the world. He said the country could and would pay the debt. But the greatest service he ever rendered to the people of the country, and the greatest success of his legislative career, was his magnificent and triumphant leadership in the forty-third Congress, against the "Force" bill, which gave the President the right to suspend the writ of habeas corpus. There never was a time when a minority needed a chieftain of such aggressiveness. MR. RANDALL showed himself to be "masterly in plan, daring in attack, cautious in retreat, wary and watchful of every weak point of the enemy; marvellous in endurance, unflinching in spirit." This was the most desperate Parliamentary battle that this country had witnessed, and MR. RANDALL's brilliant leadership won the day by preventing the "Force bill's" going to the Senate in time for action, and thus defeating it. It made him at once the ideal of the Democracy, and the party looked to him as its greatest leader. The South, grateful beyond expression for his able and successful championship, has never ceased to love him, and to hold him dear. In later years, when he stood apart, on account of his views on the tariff, from the Southern Democrats, those who remembered his great service in defeating the "Force bill" were never heard to assail him. This writer, a Tariff Reformer "of the staidest sect," recalls, with peculiar pleasure, that more than a score of times he has written in defense of the great Pennsylvanian when unjustly assailed. Our admiration for him was never lessened because we disagreed with him upon a vital economic question. On a recent visit to Washington city, just after the conflict with CZAR REED, we heard HON. WM. L. WILSON, of West Virginia, say that the Democrats felt the great need of MR. RANDALL's leadership in that contest. He was the greatest leader this generation has known. MR. WILSON, drawing a contrast between RANDALL and CARLISLE, said: "Now RANDALL had magnetism and never tired. In a great conflict, he would mount his desk, wave his hands, call to the Democrats 'all up,' and they would follow him without questioning. CARLISLE, on the other hand, will vote, but he cannot stand the fatigue of a long struggle, and does not stand upon the floor and personally lead his devoted and trustworthy followers. MR. CARLISLE is judicial—MR. RANDALL is a born leader and organizer of men." During the late struggle many Democrats, who widely differed with him on the tariff cried out, "O, for a day of RANDALL." Though very ill during that contest, MR. RANDALL read every word in the Congressional Record every day and kept posted upon every movement made. In fact, he advised with the Democratic leaders, and throughout endorsed the action taken by the Democrats. His last public expression was a letter to the Democratic caucus counselling determined resistance to the usurpation of the Speaker when he claimed the right to count a quorum.

In 1876, MR. RANDALL was elected Speaker of the House. The following incident of the canvass for the Speakership is an index into his character:

A railway magnate said to him: MR. RANDALL, you want to be Speaker. It is in my power to elect whom I please, and you know it. Allow me to name a majority of the Pacific Railroad committee and you shall be the man. Will you do it?"

"No."
"Is that your last word?"
"Yes."
"Then you will not be Speaker."

But he was elected Speaker, and held that position at the most critical period in the history of the country since the war. The settlement of the election in the TILDEN-HAYES contest had not been arrived at and the people were in an excited condition. Before taking the chair MR. RANDALL said:

"We stand in the presence of events which strain and test to the last degree our form of government. Our liberties, consecrated by so many sacrifices in the past, and preserved amid the rejoicings of an exultant people at our centennial anniversary as one among the nations of the earth, must be maintained at all hazard. The people look confidently to your moderation, to your wisdom, in this time fraught with so much peril. Let us not, I beseech you, disappoint their just expectations and their keen sense of justice, but by unceasing vigilance let us prevent even the slightest departure from the constitution and the laws, forgetting in the moment of difficulty that we are the adherents of party and only remembering that we are American citizens with a country to serve."

At the close of Congress he gave expression to the purpose that actuated him in his patriotic course in regard to the Electoral Commission in these words:

"The Democratic party yielded temporary possession of the administration rather than entail upon the people a civil war with its attendant evils."

He was re-elected Speaker of the Forty-fifth Congress and was re-elected in the Forty-sixth Congress. When the Republicans came back into power, he fell back into the ranks and took the leading place among the minority on his favorite committee on Appropriations. When MICHAEL O. KERR was speaker, MR. RANDALL was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and it was his valuable work on that committee, and the great reductions that he secured in the public expenditures, that gave so great an impetus to the "TILDEN and REFORM" shibboleth that swept the country. He was a close and valued friend of MR. TILDEN and sought to secure his re-nomination in 1880. In the convention that nominated MR. CLEVELAND he received 170 votes—more than any other candidate except MR. CLEVELAND. His friends were the first to break for MR. CLEVELAND, and during the first year's administration of that Democratic President no man stood higher in the administrative councils of the Chief Magistrate than MR. RANDALL. Afterwards WM. L. SCOTT and EDITOR SINGERLY, of Philadelphia, who lead the Tariff Reformers in that State, came near MR. CLEVELAND and he listened to them rather than to MR. RANDALL who criticized the President upon more than one occasion. This writer met a "brave and leading Democratic editor from Pennsylvania, at Detroit last Summer, at the National Editorial Association, and asked him his estimate of MR. RANDALL. "I am a disciple of CARLISLE and WM. L. SCOTT on the Tariff," he said, "but PERSONALLY I AM SAM RANDALL Democrat," and went on to tell us numberless incidents showing the honesty and the breadth and lovable qualities of our late leader. A citizen of North Carolina, who spent a week with MR. RANDALL at his country home, told us, several years ago, that he had never conceived such admiration for a man in his life as for MR. RANDALL. He represented him as an unpretentious, dignified gentleman who delighted above all things in his horses and his farm. His habits were rigidly plain and inexpensive, and his home was an old-fashioned, cheerful and roomy house where there seemed to be little or no trace of running after style. He was a simple man in his tastes, and therefore Democratic not only in opinion but in practise. His honesty was proverbial. Though Speaker of the House in the days when corruption ran riot and Congressmen became millionaires in a day, he always remained a poor man. He was so inflexibly honest that no lobbyist could dare hope to influence him by the use of the glittering metal that bought up Congressmen by the score. His worst enemy never doubted MR. RANDALL's strict honesty and integrity. When the Democrats returned to power in the House in 1883, MR. RANDALL was not re-elected Speaker. The question of reconstruction, and similar measures, had been settled, and the question of Tariff Reform was uppermost. He was the leader of the high-tariff element in the Democratic party, and a strong advocate of protection. His friends sought to reinstate him to his old position as Speaker, but were unable to do so, because his views were in conflict with the Democratic sentiment of the country. Personally, he was acceptable, and as a parliamentarian and leader he was recognized to be head and shoulders above all others in the party, but the great body of the Democracy believed that the Speaker ought to be in accord with the leading tenet of the party. They elected MR. CARLISLE, the ablest living man on the tariff question, as an exponent of Tariff Reform. MR. RANDALL was given the Chairmanship of his old committee, Appropriations, and was, up to the time of his falling health, as actively engaged as ever in preventing the unwise and extravagant expenditures of the public revenue.

Two months ago this great statesman joined the Presbyterian church, and died in the full assurance of the Christian religion. He was a truly great man—honest, sincere, and true to his friends, and faithful to all his obligations.

HARRISON TO RUN AGAIN.

"Taking in the situation as it is," SENATOR INGALLS says to a Philadelphia paper, "and regardless of whom the Democracy may select to bear their standard, as at present advised, guided by the inexorable logic of the situation, I believe BENJAMIN HARRISON will be re-nominated and re-elected." Well, elections are uncertain. Our own opinion is that if the Republicans cannot elect MR. HARRISON they cannot elect anybody.—N. Y. Herald.

The Democrats ask nothing better than that the Republicans should re-nominate the present occupant of the White House. He has made less impression upon the public and done less to win the people than any man who has been President since his grand-father, who died shortly after his inauguration. The sentiment of the country is that he is the smallest man who has been elected to Chief Magistracy in the history of the Republic. In every local election held in Indiana since DUDLEY bought the Presidential election, the Democrats have made gains. This rebuke at home, as well as in Ohio and Iowa, looks ominous for the fulfillment of MR. INGALLS' prediction.

THE MONEY QUESTION.

The fact that such a medium is in universal circulation, and that the holders are ready and willing to exchange it against any sort of service adopted to gratify their desires, exercises a kind of creative power and brings a thousand productions to market which would otherwise never have come into existence. Since money will buy anything, men are on the alert to bring forward something which will buy money; and since money is divisible into small pieces, an incredible number and variety of small services are brought forward to be exchanged against these pieces, which service we have no reason to suppose would ever be brought forward at all, were it not for the strong attraction of money. Money is a form of capital which stimulates and facilitates all the processes of production without exception.—Prof. Perry.

ALPHONSO DAUDET, in a recent conversation, described how he had been led to write his new story, "Port Tarascon, the Last Adventures of the Illustrations Tartarin," HENRY JAMES's translation of which is to begin in the June Harper. "I love Tartarin," said M. DAUDET. "Perhaps I would have let him rest in his lovely town for some time to come, had not a wholly personal consideration encouraged me to start him again on his adventures. The past year has been a hard one for me; I have suffered a great deal, and as I was searching for a distraction from my sufferings—for one of those tasks that absorb one, and make one forget physical pain—I thought of Tartarin. PASCAL forgot his neuralgia in working at mathematics; I have forgotten my rheumatism in the company Tartarin. The Tarasconian hero is perhaps indebted to me for his fame; I am indebted to him for repose, and for helping me to forget my sufferings. Ought I not to feel beholden to him?"

BILL NYE is unquestionably very funny. But a man is never really witty when he has to be so at the expense of truth. In a late article he speaks of the Western North Carolina Railroad as "an incorporated insult to the public." Now it may be that we are too obtuse to see the fun in this paragraph, but when we reflect that the Western North Carolina Railroad is one of the fastest and best equipped roads in the South, we confess to seeing nothing humorous in the slander.

The Oxford Day contains the pleasant information that the Board of Commissioners of Granville county have appropriated the sum of $300 a year to the maintenance of the Granville Grays. This evidences a just appreciation of the value of this excellent military company.

COL. JNO. D. CAMERON has retired from the Asheville Citizen owing to a diversity of views between him and MR. FULLER, the owner, on many subjects. He is unsurpassed as an accomplished editor in North Carolina.

The makers of the Ball corset have a bon-fire two or three times a year to burn up the corsets that women have worn a week or two or three, and taken back to the stores because they didn't like 'em. How many corsets get burned, do you think? One in three-thousand.

That means that when three-thousand women try the Ball corset, one of 'em makes up her mind that it isn't the corset for her. That's too bad! A corset that's right for two-thousand nine-hundred and ninety-nine women ought to be pretty nearly right for the other one. Her husband must have his hands full?

We have a primer on Corsets for you at the store.
