GREAT SPEECHES.

We surrender our editorial space today to the publication of the great speeches made last night at the Reform Club dinner, in the banquet hall of Madison Square Garden, New York City. It was a great occasion and at once an appropriate celebration of the recent Democratic victories and the merry Christmas holidays.

The following is the full text of the address of Hon. WM. L. WILSON, of West Virginia, who stands among the ablest of Democrats. His great speech at Wake Forest last year has made him a prime favorite in North Carolina, and the people in North Carolina will be glad to read his words of That may be true, but it does not fo'wisdom. In response to the toast: "The 52nd Congress-May it be just,

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN:-The Democratic party is rejoicing over the most notable victory it has ever won in its many political contests. But it is already confronted by the sobering truth that it is one thing to win a battle and another, and often a more difficult thing, to make sure and permanent the fruits of victory. The great-ness of its triumph in the recent election was not due to the skill of party leaders or the popularity of party candidates. It was the spontaneous and unheralded uprising of the people against the policies and methods of its opponents, and the Fifty second Congress will be judged in history by its success in directing this uprising to the complete and lasting overthrow of those policies and methods.

The "phenomenal capacity of the Dem-The "phenomenal capacity of the Democratic party for blundering" has long been an article of faith with its enemies, to which they turn for consolation in times of disaster. But, Mr. Chairman, if we look to the only two Congresses that have been fully controlled by Republicans in the last sixteen years, we cannot regard as merely accidental that Congress as helding the key to ignoboth of them have been swiftly overwhelmed by "tidal waves" of popular displeasure, and that each one has legislated in its closing under the ban of emphatic rejection by the people.

If the blundering of a Congress is to be measured by the condemnation it has provoked, Mr. Reed's Congress has not only outstripped Mr. Keifer's Cougress in blundering, but has achieved for it-self a pre-eminence unapproached by any of its fifty predecessors.

And if recent political experience proves any thing, it shows that the Democratic party never blunders so fatally as when it abandons or palters with its true principles, and that the Republican party as now dominated, never blunders so effectively as when it has free scope and opportunity for the application of its principles.

Of this fact, the late campaign was a signal illustration.

History is, in the main, ports that the cost of producing an acre of freedom have been waged; the quesa record of the successful attempts of a of corn ready for market is $8.00; that small class, among every people, to get the average crop for five years has been control of the government that they may 331 bushels, and statistics show that the use the taxing power for their own aggrandizement. Such is an incomplete list of the flagitious doings of the present Congress. Who that reviews this list can marvel at the tremendous explosion of popular anger last November? And if the condemnation was not greater than it deserved, what is the plain duty of the Representatives whom the people have commissioned to succeed it?

Undoubtedly the fifty-second Congress will begin its work, with one lesson that none of its members can mistake, and that lesson is that its shortest road to irretrievable bankruptcy will be to follow the footsteps of its immediate predecessor, and its surest road to popular approval wili be to offer as clear a contrast as possible to the temper, the methods and the legislation of that predecessor. In this one lesson it will find no small part of the justice, temperance and foresight, we invoke for it to-night. It has been a favorite saying of the leaders of the present Congress, when arraigned for refusing to allow consideration or public discussion of their measures, that the American people demand of Congress the transaction of business, -business being, too often, a name for some kind of class jobbery.

low that they demand or will tolerate the transaction of business by bureaucratic or revolutionary methods. In temperate and far-seeing," Mr. WILSON | deed the methods of transacting public business is of the very definition of free government. All governments must levy taxes, but it measures all the way from despotism to freedom whether taxes are levied by arbitrary decree or through the free and deliberate action of the representatives of the people who

If, then, Mr. Chairman, the protective principle brings in its train a corrupted ballot, a perpetual lobby, an unnumbered brood of bounties and subsidies, paternal government, despotic methods of legislation, and a standing menace to free elections, must we not look to the rescue of our taxing system from private control and its dedication to public uses, as the beginning and only sure basis of every reform that seeks to overthrow these dangers to free govern-

But deeply and sincerely as we may believe all this, there is a wise statesmanship, learned in the school of experience, that bids law makers remember that temperate reform is permanent reform, having in it the principle of Congress as holding the key to ignominious defeat or stable victory in 1892, we cannot give better expression to our hopes, our wishes and our anxiety, than to pray that it may be "Just, temperate and far-seeing." And why should it not be? True the majority that shall come up to maintain the people's cause in the next House, may be hindered by its unwieldiness, but among both the old and the new members, will be found not a few, who can claim with the old reformers, that they have earned a right to share in the work of the harvest, by having done, to the best of their ability, their duty in the seed time.

GOV. BOIES'S SPEECH.

In response to the toast "Our New Allies in the Northwest; What our Farmers have a Right to Demand," Governor Boies, of Iowa, made a strong speech, in which he showed that the The campaign, Mr. Chairman, was not farmers were raising produce at a
