COMMENCEMENT DAY

6Mar94 -YESTERDAY'S EXERCISES AT THE UNIVERSITY.

The Graduating Addressess - The Medals Awarded - Degrees Conferred - A Large Crowd and a Successful Commencement.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., June 6-Commencement was ushered in with cloudless weather, a large concourse of visitors, increasing with each train, and the general unanimity and good feeling that always pervades the University Commencements. Tuesday was Alumni Day, together with Class Day. The exercises of the Alumni meeting were held in Gerrard Hall, and were most enjoyable despite the warmness that envelops everything.

A large crowd is present, which increases with every train, and assumed its largest proportions to-

The exercises in the morning were devoted to the Alumni and memorial addresses on Joseph J. Davis and Walter L. Steele, delivered by Hon. T. C. Fuller and Judge R. T. Bennett.

President Winston outlined the exercises for Commencement, and then the opening prayer was offered.

Col. Thos. S. Kenan, president of the Alumni Association, took his seat and called the meeting to order. He then introduced Hon. T. C. Fuller, whose address upon the life, character and usefulness of Joseph J. Davis was a most excellent effort. Judge Fuller said that he was personally acquainted with Judge Davis in his youth and should for religious prophet, hastened on the that reason alone be an impartial unity of Italy by social and relig-He was born in Franklin county, April 13th, 1828. He described his family and ancestors, his early life, school days, college life, and how in 1850 he obtained the degree of Bachelor of Law and entered the bar of North Carolina. Judge Fuller ran briefly through his devotion to his client's cause in a law case, his conscience always standing ahead of all other attributes; that he was no brilliant genius, but his fidelity, moral courage and practice of christianity led him to the highest success in the walk of life he had chosen; in this he was assisted by the general affection and confidence of all which his purity of character had gained for him. No bribes and threats could appeal to his firm and upright nature.

He was no skilled and eloquent orator, but yet he had that inestimable power of holding the attention of his audience on any and every subject. His relation to the civil war was next described; how he became a soldier with only a captain's commission, never seeking promotion, although active, intelligent and well informed in military affairs. In 1863 he was besought to become a candidate for Congress. This he refused. "I have promised to stay with my men and that promise I will keep," was his answer to Judge Gilliam's offer of a judgeship. In a gallant charge at Gettysburg he was captured and imprisoned until the fall of the Confederacy. During the troublous reconstruction period he was honored with the highest confidence and esteem by the people of his State; he was thrice elected as a member of Congress, and as a crowning honor, the choice of the people fell upon him as the Judge of the Supreme Court of North Carolina. When this was finally ended the general verdict of the entire State was "Well done thou good and faithful servant." He was ambitious, he sought office, but he was no intriguer, for he honestly believed that with the leverage of power he could be most useful to the people he represented. "Public office is a public trust," was his maxim. His life bears the stamp the outgrowth of free thought. of honest, faithful and able service, The Revolution failed to unite these and by these he gained the applause of friends, respect of opponents and love of all classes. "Behold a good man and a just." Hon. R. T. Bennett's address on the life of Col. Walter L. Steele was also a fine effort, and was highly liberty, has granted this right to enjoyed.

Wednesday morning-It rained hard last night, somewhat decreasing the crowd at the Representative speaking and at the annual reception in the gymnasium. Dr. Winston received the visitors at the latter. Several hundred shook his hand and congratulated him upon his success for the past cises opened with prayer by Dr. two years. I. Walser, of Yadkin College, took for his subject "The Man of the World." Napoleon was pre-eminently such a man. Born in the midst of a great intellectual and political revolution, he became the recognized leader of the political world. His success grew out of his surroundings as much as his own genius, and the decay of aristocratic institutions lent power to his cause.

Mr. A. H. Koonce, of Richlands, described "The Ideal State" a republic whose constitution always expresses the best life of the nation, and has for its aim the best development of individual character. A Teutonic race will some day produce this republic.

Mr. F. C. Harding, of Greenville, told us of "Mazzini, the Prophet of Italy." The mission of the prophet has produced two results, one relating to the church, the other to the state. The earlier mission, religious in its nature, was to establish the true relation between the individual and the universal God. The later mission, politcal and social, was to establish the relation between the individual and humanity. Mazzini, the type of the ions reform. Religion is the inspiration of politics, and the modern republic is the outcome of the philosophy of Christ.

Mr. V. E. Whitlock, of Asheville, spoke of "Robert Browning, a Prophet of the Age." The tendency to give the intellect a supremacy over the soul, to subordinate feeling to understanding, is strongly opposed by Browning, who pleads for a higher development of feeling. He is prophetic in protesting against meaningless symbols in life, in demanding a spiritual awakening, and in denouncing the faults of his age. Interprets definitely human ideals and longings. Uncertainty an essential element in all progress, spirituai and material.

Mr. E. M. Wilson, of Lenoir, had for his theme, "The Scholar in Politics-Milton a Type." The practical, utilitarian spirit of the age has so affected our politics that the ideal become the "practical politician," not the statesman. Milton, the most distinguished literary character of his day, was also the best type of the true statesman. There is a crying need of the scholar's influence in the politics of today, and the only solution of the problem of selecting competent and trustworthy public officers is in elevating politics to a learned profession.

The theme chosen by Mr. Howard E. Rondthaler, of Salem, is "A Reform School, North Carolina's need and duty.' After showing that the great lesson taught by the progress of Christian civilization has been that the duty of the strong, physically, mentally and morally is to care for their weaker brethren, he pictures the condition of the youthful offenders, those morally weak, in our jails, penitentiary and chain gangs, closing with an appeal for the establishment of a juvenile reformatory to remedy the existing evils. Mr. J. C. Biggs, of Oxford, had for his subject "The True American." The American of today is a product of the union of the Cavaalier and the Puritan. The former sprung from chivalry, the latter diverse elements, and a true union was impossible until the principles memorable debate of 1830 the mise could be accepted, and the civil war, which was inevitable, rendered possible the fusion of Cavalier and Puritan principles into the fall-rounded American. Mr. W. P. Wooten of LaGrange. discussed "Local Self Government the Life-boat of Liberty." The only way to guarantee liberty to a people is to grant them the right of local self-government. Every notion which has ever enjoyed real its people. The desire of this right was the hidden principle which caused the separation of the American colonies from Great Britian. The exercise of this right in the governments of our states, counties, and towns is what today makes us
