Mr. S. A. Campbell, the furniture man, has an attractive ad. in to-day's HARBINGER. Mr. Campbell has been in the furniture business for twelve years, and knows how to buy, when to buy, and WHAT to buy, in order to suit his numerous customers. His Fayetteville street store is such a furniture emporium that the ladies term it a "perfect dream," and his Wilmington street store, presided over by Mr. C. D. Holland, presents such a scene of activity and bustle that one can hardly decide what he really does want, and his numerous polite clerks will take you in charge, and we guarantee the very best attention. All goods sold on easy weekly or monthly payments, if so desired.

Mr. Walter Woolcott and Miss Phillips, his artistic milliner, are both now in New York purchasing Spring goods, but are expected back next week. "Mr. Walter" sends word that he will have a bang-up line of goods this season, and that his millinery department will eclipse all previous efforts of his in that line. But he will tell about that in his new ad. later.

Why Eight Hours ?

Because of the present long-hour day many are unemployed, and the man on the street fixes the wages paid to the man at work.

Labor-saving machinery has increased the producing capacity of workmen who, in justice, should be afforded more leisure.

The eight-hour day would increase the longevity of the workers.

It would give greater opportunity for social and educational development.

It would raise the standard of living, upon which prosperity depends.

It would help the taxpayer by putting the tramp to work.

It would promote an independent spirit, which is lacking in over-worked people.

It would build up trade unions, and concentrated effort is the law of success in the militant world of industry.

It would open up the road to every desirable social reform.

It would give men a chance to get acquainted with their families.

It would promote temperance by removing the desire for stimulants, which comes from long hours of labor.

It would make better citizens, by giving the citizen more time to understand his duties.
