

bination is the fusion party pure and simple. There are no indications of disruption, and no factional divisions. We will work together and vote together for the control of the State, without letting any jealoustes interfere with our success. There is absolutely no chance that North Carolina, will ever go democratic again in a State election as long as the present political conditions exist.

"But the combination will not be carried into a national campaign. Next year there will be three electoral tickets in the field in North Carolins, the republican, the populist and the democratic, and the re publicans will win. Of this I have not the slightest doubt. There are more republicans in the State than populists and more populists than democrates. The populist party is made up almost entirely of men who were formerly democrats, and it has so depleted the democratic ranks that there is absolutely no prospect of democratic success."

Apropos of the above smooth remarks it may be observed that they are very obaracteristic of Mr. Settle, but it may be noted that be is talking now upon a little different strain than that which he adopted when he was last in Raleigh and when he said that the Populists could not do anything else but fuse with the Re-publican party and that their salva tion was dependent upon it Editor Hal Ayer, of the Cauca
