A Guilford Battle Ground Poet,

The northern section of the his toric old county is said to be musestruck.

Treasurer Worth's recommendation to cancel the legislative appropriation for the Guilford Battle Ground is ill-timed and unfortunate. Judge Schenck has done both ancestry and posterity, a power of good in reclaiming the scene of that memor able revolutionary conflict from wild woods and from oblivion by locating its boundaries (though Joe Morehead found the place first) and subsequently digging up the relics and inaugerating a lot of fourth of July celebrations. Some two or three poems of patriotic significance have already been brought forth-others of like, as well as of different import will probably be forthcoming. The latest is from the son of a butcher who sells beef to the adjacent towns. This youth, from heavy and frequent night rations of roast, having become thoroughly "cowed," thereby is fortunate enough to have lived through it all, and not only so but gathers fresh inspiration from visions of "souse" and other concomitants of the scalded hecatombs peculiar to this season of the year. Hear him on

"Hog Killing Time."

Oh, how it makes a fellow feel To heav a hog in winter squeal! What splendid visions quickly rise of smoking stews and backbone pies.

When o'er the heart this music steals It every headache quickly heals, And fancy claps her joyous wings And sweetly sings of chitterlings.

Or if she wish a softer lay She hovers o'er the sausage tray And poureth forth a wondrous song Of linked-up sweetness drawn out

When er she wings her rapid flight What glowing pleasure of deligdt, And eh, how bright the future shines When fancy warbles tender lines

Let others praise when heard afar The dulcet flute—the soft guitar,

But give to me in woe or weal

The dying hog's poetic squeal. asy to Take asy to Operate
