

"A Life."

LUCY CHAMELIS DAY.

Out in the sunshine, bright and gay,
A boy runs forth with sunny hair;
All day long a joyous song
Is wafted forth on the sweet spring air.

Then night comes on with its peaceful shades.
The song is ended, the silence deep;
The prayer has been said at his mother's knee,
And now in his snowy bed he'll sleep.

Over his books till the "we sma" hours
A boy is pondering with anxious care;
Knowledge is holding him in her arms,
As she strikes his forehead high and bare.

Deep in his heart is an image sweet,
Neither time nor knowledge can it efface;
It lures him on to higher spheres,
With its eyes so tender, its charming grace.

The odor of flowers, the gaslight soft,
Have mingled together a scene divine,
Where beauty and wisdom together sit;
Where grace and honor are both entwined.

But a mound of earth and a smooth grave stone.
This morn in her wedding robes of silk
His image so cherished was laid away.

He is now kneeling where all is night,
But she is singing where all is day.
The world is down at his feet today,
But little he cares for its homage and praise.

His heart is buried deep under the sod,
In his mind are the memories of other days,
But the image is with him and still will be,
Though now a spirit, unheard, unseen.

She is leading his soul though he knows it not
To tender pastures where all is green.
When at last the loom of his life is bare,
And all the threads have been cut and spun.

The spirit will lead him gently forth
To dwell with the happy beyond the sun.
