Query?

Correspondence of the VISITOR.

Can you tell us the reason why the street sprinkler (when out,) only comes half way up the block on Wilmington Street between Hargett and Morgan streets, then turns around and goes back down the street without putting one drop of water in front of our doors? The dust is just as heavy and does just as much harm on that street as any other. We do business and pay taxes and license just as the other merchants do Then why are the sprinklers ordered to turn around just in the middle of the block without wetting in front of our places of business? Why such unjust

Mrs. Cleveland's Great Friend.

[From a New York Letter.]

One of the many delightful women whom Mrs. Grover Cleveland has attracted to New York during the past winter is Miss Edna Dean Proctor, whose verse one continually wishes would be more generally seen in magazine literature. But Miss Proctor has an ample income of her own, is in no wise dependent upon her pen, and thus she writes only as the inspiration comes to her. As I saw this gifted writer in New York a fortnight ago she was exceedingly attractive, and I can readily understand Mrs. Cleveland's fondness for her. Her carriage is most dignified, and there is a quiet charm and elegance in her manner which at once bespeaks the woman of culture and refinement. She is I should judge, of middle age, and looks straight at you through a pair of most expressive seal brown e es. Her hair is steel gray, combed back so as to reveal a broad, high forehead. Herdress is quiet in effect, but rich in its material Her charities. are numerous but unostentatious. She is, in every sense, a typical New England woman. Her winters are spent with relatives in South Framingham, near Boston, while her summers are divided between her beautiful birth place and the home of the poet Whittier, of whom she is an intimate friend.
