NOTICE.

The proprietors of the VISITOR are always anxious and willing to accommodate their patrons as far as it can be done without detriment to the interests of the paper, or injustice to our friends. Our space is limited, and in order to make the columns attractive, the matter should be as varied as possible. The numerous nominations for official preference, thus early in the campaign, will prove too heavy on our columns for gratuitous insertion, and, hence, we feel under the necessity of adopting a scale of rates for the insertion of such cards, or communications. Hereafter a charge of twenty-five cents an inch (eight lines) or less, will be made for such insertions.

RALEIGH, JUNE 20, 1890.

Give a Guess.

We will give a subscription to the VISITOR of 6 months to any person who will guess nearest to the population of Raleigh as returned by the census enumerators this year. We will also give a 3 months subscription to any person who will guess nearest to the population of Raleigh Township. Estimates should be sealed and sent directed,

Potato Bugs.

Correspondence of the VISITOR.

It is quite refreshing to see occasionally a truly unselfish, public-spirited progressive man.

Raleigh has the satisfaction and proud distinction of claiming, at least, one such. I allude to your whole-souled, clever townsman, Capt. B P Williamson. He has done more perhaps to revolutionize the system of farming in central North Carolina, by encouraging the cultivation of the grasses and stock-raising than any other one man or set of men.

But my purpose was to speak specially of a new enterprise in which the Captain has embarked, and be it said to his credit that he sometimes makes sacrifices in order to prove his theories. He has fully demonstrated the old theory of growing two blades of grass where one grew before.

The Captain, this spring, conceived the idea of propagating the specimen, commonly known as "potat obug," on an improved plan. Learning from observation, as well as the testimony of his neighbors, that the Irish potato was the favorite food of this animal, bird, varmint or whatever you may choose to call it, he turned under the clover on his brag lot and planted in potatoes.

Passing the lot one morning, just after a rain over night, I discovered that one potato had cracked the ground, and that evening I noticed that it had disappeared, but on looking down I discovered a whole regiment of his "new importations" setting on his plank fence with faces to the front just like soldiers.

It is both interesting and amusing to see them dismount in the early morning and their skirmish for the potato tops.

The Captain evidently over-estimated the yield of his brag lot or under-estimated the increase and capacity of his pet bugs. It is evident that the supply of food has been entirely inadequate and the Captain might have been subjected to the very serious and grave charge of "cruelty to animals."

As I pass there daily I can cheerfully bear testimony to the fact that any such charge or even suspicion would be unjust. He has given all that he had or expected. He has removed all obstructions by having the nut-grass and morning glories pulled up. He has even strewn lime to "mark the place where they may look and expect the potato that cometh not."

Thus endeth the first lesson.

"Amen."

Southern Cultivator.

An amusing story is told of a wealthy old lady who had frequently expressed her intention of leaving all her money to her favorite servant. One day the servant was sitting in the kitchen talking to her sweetheart when she said: "I wish the old lady was dead."

A parrot which belonged to the lady had overheard this wicked remark, and every time its mistress was in its presence it cried, "I wish the old lady was dead." The lady, getting annoyed at hearing it so often, went to her minister and told him about it, upon which he promised to send a parrot of his, which was a very religious one, to stay beside hers for a day or two, and see if it would convert it. This was done, and the lady going into the room where they were kept a few days after, was rather taken aback at hearing her own parrot crying out "I wish the old lady was dead," and the minister's responding in solemn tones, "Amen, amen."

Jackson's Men at Richmond.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun at Hagerstown, Md, sends the following incident in connection with the recent unveiling ceremonies at Richmond, Va: The morning after the unveiling of the Lee statue, as the sun rose over Richmond its rays fell upon a row of figures wrapped in gray blankets and sleeping on the green grass around the statue of Stonewall Jackson in Capitol Square. As the sun grew brighter and the bustle of life moves the city these figures one by one unrolled themselves from their blankets—here a gray beard, there a gray head—got up, yawned, and stretched themselves in the morning air. Just then a citizen passing by said to them in kindly anxiety: "Heavens, men, could you find no better bed in Richmond last night?" "Yes," answered one, "there were plenty of places; all Richmond was open to us, but"—and he turned his face to the silent face of his immortal chief and added, with a throb in his throat—"we were his boys, and we wanted to sleep with the old man just once more!"

A Slanderer Punished.

New York Star.

I met a man yesterday who will carry a reminiscence of Memorial Day as long as he lives. The reminiscence is a badly broken nose, and this is how he got it: On the afternoon of May 30 I came upon a crowd of men surrounding a big, blustering loud mouthed man at the southern end of City Hall Square. He was decanting on the Richmond Monument, and telling what the Government ought to do to suppress the "rebel demonstration." From that he turned to a tirade of abuse of Southern men and women and especially the women, whom he charged with the grossest immorality. Suddenly a quiet looking little man, with a Prince Albert coat and a high hat, stepped up. There was something in the young man's face—he was not over twenty five—that awed the crowd which had before been laughing at the orator.

"Sir," said the young man, "I'm a Southerner."

"Well, I can't help that," said the big fellow.

"My mother and sisters are Southern women," continued the young man, without noticing the interruption and in the same dangerously quiet way.

"Well," said the blatherskite contemptuously, "I don't know but what they are the same as —"

He did not get any further. The little man hit him such a blow as I never saw delivered outside of a prize ring. His "ring" for the instant seemed to be a pile driver run by electricity. The big fellow went down, and, after a quiver, laid still. The little man turned and said in the same quiet way: "Is there any gentleman here who sympathizes with his sentiments. There wasn't any one who did, and several of those present tried to congratulate him, but he modestly walked away. The big fellow, with a broken nose and both eyes swollen shut, was carried into a drug store to be patched up. No one seemed to know who either of the parties was.

Ten Cents a Day Without Board

New York Tribune.

California miners who have returned from China declare that the Lig Hi mines, of the richness of which many surprising stories have been told, are ordinary quartz mines. They are all operated by Chinese, who have learned from foreign miners how to run stamp mills. The ore runs from $25 to $50. The price paid for labor is ten cents per day without board.

Rev. Sam. Jones.

Charlotte News.

Rev Sam P Jones is to begin a series of meetings in Norfolk, next Friday. In Richmond, last Sunday, in his talk to men, there were 12,000 in the audience. The sermon was a strong one, and was about the sin of avarice, drinking, card playing, dancing and theatre going. Richmond did not respond in a financial way, nearly as well as did Charlotte. On Sunday, a collection was taken up for Mr Jones and Mr Stewart, and though there were 12,000 people in the house, not quite $1,000 was raised. Monday night, Mr Jones worked to raise money to pay off the debt of the tabernacle, and despite his most earnest efforts, only $600 resulted.

Judge Shipp Better.

Judge Shipp's condition was considered at midnight last night more hopeful. If he is no worse today, the chances are in his favor.

Dr Peter Hines, of Raleigh, a relative of the family, is here in consultation with the attending physicians.—Charlotte Chronicle.
