

Our Confederate Flag.

There was a pathetic scene in the big tent at the close of one of the meetings. It illustrated a use to which an old Confederate battle flag may be put without adverse criticism from any source. Even the super-royal Eliot F. Shephard could find no objection to this scene. There had been speaking. The courage of the Southerner had been extolled in one breath, and his devotion to the Union of today had been declared in another. * * * Then Gen. George W. Gordon came forward. He carefully unfolded the wrappings of white paper, and held with both hands the remnants of a Confederate battle flag. The shreds, the holes, and the stains were eloquent. At the sight of them the veterans winked their eyes and breathed hard. General Gordon kept silent for a minute and then said:

"It is dead. It will do no harm. It was the battle flag of the Eleventh Tennessee, and it had this appearance after passing through the battles of Chickamauga, Mission Ridge, Resaca, Kenesaw, Atlanta, Jonesboro, and other battles. Four soldiers fell with it in their hands at the battle of Mission Ridge, and a fifth soldier carried it from the field."

General Gordon stopped to swallow a lump in his throat, and proceeded: "The discoloration which you see on the white of the flag is the blood of gallant Ensign Lieutenant Drew, who fell at Franklin, Tenn. He was not a Tennessean, but was from Louisiana—a brother of the well-known commander of the Louisiana Tigers. Captain Clark, of the Eleventh Tennessee, secured this flag at Beutonsville. He knew the surrender was at hand. He took the flag from its staff, put it in his bosom and brought it home, wearing it between his outer and under shirts. He gave it to me after I was released as a prisoner of war. For twenty five years I have kept the flag, and God helping me, I will keep it until this life's troubled dream is ended, and then I hope it may be buried with me."

As the meeting broke up the veterans, in twos and threes and squads, went up to the platform, looked at the relic as if it was some sacred thing, and wept. This is no imagined story. Great tears rolled down the tanned and wrinkled cheeks, and were mopped by shirt sleeves.—W. B. Stevens in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Death of Gen. Fremont,

Norfolk Ledger, 14th.

Gen. John C. Fremont, who died in New York yesterday of peritonitis, had an eventful career. The son of a French immigrant, he was born in Savannah, Ga., in 1813, and received a collegiate education. Appointed to a lieutenancy in the United States corps of engineers, he penetrated the Rocky Mountains at two points, and won the title of "the pathfinder." He also defined much of the geography between the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific coast, and bore a conspicuous part in the conquest of Upper California. He represented California in the United States Senate from 1849 to 1851. The first candidate for the Republican party, he was defeated for President in 1856 by Jas. Buchanan. Gen. Fremont served as a major general in the Union army during the late civil war, and at the present session of Congress was placed on the retired list, with the rank of major general.

"We have a reservation for them," replied the New Yorker.

"Indeed?"

"Yes—a mental reservation."

"Where do you put all the monuments you erect to public men?" asked a visitor from Chicago of a New York resident.

Ice Cellar!

We have opened an ice cellar under the Henry Building, opposite the post office, where our Mr R H Murphy will be pleased to give every one full value for their cash or tickets. This ice is made on large iron plates, then cut into blocks, and has no porous or soft parts. This process insures wonderful transparency, great density and freedom from air bubbles. It is more nearly like natural lake or river ice than can be made by any other process, but is more pure and more durable, as demonstrated by actual experiments, with both under the same conditions.

Absolute Purity,
