

It Didn't Take Long.

Chicago Herald.
A big man who looked like he might be a senator or a rich merchant, a retired banker or something of that sort, walked down the street a few evenings ago, and stopping under a lamp post looked intently upward. A policeman saw him and stepped over to that side of the walk to see what it meant. The next man who happened along also stopped, and after catching what he thought was the proper range began to look. Another man came up and did the same thing. Pretty soon a young fellow and his girl caught sight of the stagers, and they began to see what there was to be seen. Presently some one in the rapidly increasing party spoke up.

"What's all this mean?" he asked the policeman.

"Git along wid ye," responded the official.

Just then the big man turned around.

"My goodness!" he exclaimed, "what on earth is this crowd here for?"

"What are you looking at?" asked one of the bystanders.

"Looking at?" echoed the gentleman, "why, bless me, I was only absorbed in figures."

"About what?"

"I was wondering how long it would take me to block the sidewalk by saying nothing."

Joke!

Indignant Bicyclist—Madam, you must call your dog off, he runs after me every time I pass. Here he comes now, (rides off.)

Old Lady—Here Snip; Here Snip; come here, you foolish dog, them ain't bones, them's legs.—Greensboro Bicycle Bureau.
