LARGEST CITY CIRCULATION.

RALEIGH, JANUARY 6 1891.

An Oklahoma paper spells the name of the Governor, S t e a l; this is a bad name.

The Statesville (N. C.) Landmark states that Mr J. A. D. Stephenson, an accomplished mineralogist of that town, is preparing a cabinet of North Carolina minerals for exhibition at the Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1892. It is an example which may well be followed by enterprising citizens of every State in the country, particularly in Virginia.

Bradock, Pa., was thrown into great excitement by the riotous demonstrations of about 200 strikers, most of them Hungarians. About 1 o'clock at night, they attacked the Edgar Thompson, Steel Works, and a number of persons were more or less seriously hurt. The feeling against the Hungarians is very bitter.

Murderers who appeal to the governor of Ohio for executive clemency on the ground that they were drunk when the crime was committed, are told that such grounds even aggravate their crime. Judges hold the same way, and no jury in the land should make drunkenness palliate a graver offense. One crime should not be made an excuse for another.—Texas Daily Herald.

The El Paso Daily Herald says: The railroads in South Carolina are trying hard to defeat the bill to compel them to provide separate accommodations for white and black people, and they claim that it will cost them a great deal of money to furnish extra engines and rolling stock. The operation of a similar law in Mississippi and Louisiana, however, has demonstrated the fact that it has not cost the railroads anything at all. Before the law was passed every railroad in those states ran trains consisting of four or more coaches, and all that the law requires is that separate cars shall be set apart for both races, and that one shall not be allowed to go into the cars belonging to the other. A similar law will probably be passed by the legislature of Texas at its next session.

Wilmington Star: A Mr. Ramsay, member elect of the Illinois Legislature, who resides in East St. Louis, is in trouble. He was a blessed bachelor until a few days ago, when he and a frolicsome young lady concluded they would have some impromptu fun and have a mock marriage for a joke. They did, but the fellow who performed the ceremony did it so effectively that they found themselves under the law married sure enough, and the question now is how they are going to get single again, as they don't like the joke well enough to stay married to each other. The festive couple finds getting married even for fun a serious business.

A train while running fifty miles an hour near Mansfield, Minn., ran into a herd of about 100 deer, who dashed across the track at the entrance to a cut. It was too late to stop, and a large number were killed. One magnificent buck was borne off on the cowcatcher.—Liberator.

A party of young men were out skating near Wheeling a few days ago, and one of the party broke through and was drowned.

DIMINUTIVE CAVE DWELLERS.

Subterranean Lilliputians who Scramble on all Fours Discovered.

Suffolk Herald.

No discovery will likely awaken more wonder than exists today among the people of Marengo, Ind., by reason of one accidentally made by some boys who entered the cave Sunday morning with the intention of spending the day enjoying the scenery, but lost their way in the labyrinths of the cave, and did not find their way out till the end of three days.

When they removed to the outer world after three days' absence, and reported to have discovered new and extensive additions to the already known cave, and that parts of the cave were inhabited by a tribe or race of diminutive beings, almost Lilliputians, the young explorers were laughed at, but their earnestness begat confidence in a few, and after a short rest returned to their search for the "cave dwellers." After an absence of nearly four days the band returned, and hundreds of people are flocking to the spot to learn the facts and making ready to organize for an exploration on a large scale to verify the faith which they already have in the second report.

There is no doubt existing at this moment as to the truth, and the excitement is at fever heat, while the crowd is momentarily increasing. These "cave dwellers" appear to be the lowest type of humanity, and may be what Darwin would call "the missing link." They average less than three feet high and weigh about forty pounds. It is claimed that they run upon all fours when they become tired of the erect position, though this is doubtless because they were hastening or scrambling over great heaps of stone when seen by the boys.

They exhibited extreme fear of the intruders, and displayed a total absence and ignorance of the most remote excuse for clothing—not even the time honored waistband or breech clout being called into requisition to clothe their persons. This gave the observers full opportunity to note that there is no sign of caudal appendage, as before mentioned, the average weight is less than forty pounds. There is no sign of hirsuteness about the breasts of the males, as we find among the more robust specimens of mankind, and they are little, if any, physically superior to the females. The heads of all—male and female—are well supplied with long hair, so densely tangled and muddled that the true color could not be discerned.

There can be no question about the food of these creatures. It can be nothing but fish supplied from the waters with which these caves abound. If they infested some of the interior apartments we might suppose that the flesh of animals furnished part of their sustenance, but long before their place of abode is reached all vestige is lost of those animals which haunt caves or seek refuge therein. Time may develop other entrances to this subterranean world, and that some of them are nearer these beings than any yet discovered.

Little more can be added at this moment, but the discoveries of the next few days may surprise the reading world. Efforts will be made to capture specimens, but their agility, coupled with their ability to see in the dark better than their pursuers, may for a time baffle all attempts in this line. Modes of life, etc., cannot be even surmised. Of course they have some form of language, for when the explorers were observed a babylike chatter arose that would deafen a miller and almost awakened the cave with its echoes, which rang in response to a few at first and then to a united effort.
