LARGEST CITY CIRCULATION.

RALEIGH, N. C., JULY 8, 1891.

MANUFACTURING.

The great need of the city, is manufacturing. A city of residences is well enough if all the citizens are rich, or own a sufficiency of stocks and bonds to produce an income equal to their annual demands, but this cannot be. Only a very small per cent of the population of any city or section possess enough to yield them a support. Then it is the interest of those owning property to so so encourage and support manufacturing that those who do not own an income in property may be furnished the most advantageous investment for their labor, from which to derive a support.

No line of manufacturing generally to be found, furnishes a larger yield to the laboring classes, and at the same time so certain a profit to manufacturers, as tobacco. The labor and skill materializes, or capitalizes, as readily in tobacco manufacturing as in any line we now think of, and it is about all of strictly home origin. Our farmers who raise a million pounds of tobacco bring it to market and get $100,000 for it. The manufacturer buys it and adds $300, 000 worth of labor. He sells it, and outside of his own profit, turns loose $400,000; to the extent of which sum the community has been benefited and enriched. But somebody says. O; well, that is all right, I have heard that before. And so you may, but are we acting as though we realized its truth? In order for manufacturing to get a start in a commu nity it is necessary for that community to give it a supporting encouragement. A certain amount of local support is essential in every line of business. We knew a skilled plug tobacco manufacturer to locate in a town of about 1,000 inhabitants on account of his wife's health. He naturally embarked in a plug factotory, but soon found he had to move his factory elsewhere, or fail, on account of the absence of the necessary local patronage and support. We have some factories in the city, but should have ten times the number. and the grocerymen should patronize them because much of the pay the oparatives receive is spent for groceries. For the same reason the dry goods men, the druggists, the doctors, the lawyers and everybody else; that the patronage may be reciprocated by the operatives. No community can be | truly prosperous where the laboring classes are not profitably employed.

A Famous Tree.

The Louisville Courier-Journal.

In conversation with some friends | at the Willard the other night, the Hon. John Young Brown spoke of a famous oak tree in Webster county that was from 1811 till 1860 the object that marked the corner of Henderson, Union and Hopkins counties. The tree has a history. About the beginning of this century two men and three women came into Kentucky from North Carolina. The men were the brothers Harpe, Micajah and Wiley. The elder was a man of gigan tic statue, rawboned, muscular and athletic; the younger rather small in size, but very agile in his movements and hardy of physical constitution. Both were fiendish in disposition, passionate, ferocious and bloody thirsty. Robbery was their trade and murder their amusement. The women who accompanied them were their wives-"Big" Harp, as the elder was called, having two, and "Little" Harpe, the younger one. A few days after their advent into Kentucky on the upper Green river they murdered a man named Langford, for no reason that was ever discovered except their passion for shedding human blood. They were apprehended for the crime and lodged in jail at Danville, from which they managed to escape. Soon after they murdered a small mill boy in Adair county, son of Colonel Trabue. Pursuing their way to western Kentucky, they murdered in succession three men-Dooley, Gilmore and Hudgeon, Finally they murdered a whole family of women and children named Stigall and a guest of the family, one Love, and set fire to the building. A posse under the lead of Captain Leeper, a powerful and fearless man, pursued them, and a shot from Leeper's rifle brought down "Big" Harpe, near the root of the tree mentioned by Mr. Brown. He was desperately wounded, when Stigall, the head of the family murdered by the miscreants, came up and dispatched him. The younger Harpe escaped, and was afterward apprehended and hanged for a murder he had committed in Mississippi, "Big" Harp's head was severed from his body, and some one, ascending the tree spoken of, then a slender sapling, severed the trunk near the top and, sharpening the standing shaft, struck the head of the dead miscreant on it. where it remained for years. The tree was at, or near the point where the Tickets on sale July 18th to 22nd, inroads from Henderson, Hopkinsville and Morganfield intersect, and the place is called "Harpe's Head" to this day. Soon after the head was gibbeted some one ascended the tree and carved the head of a man under Harpe's head, and the effigy yet remains. About four years ago the tree was struck with lightning, and nearly all its branches destroyed; some months ago it was again stricken with lightning and the current set it a fire, and all that remains of it is a charred trunk, a shaft twenty or thirty feet high, with the carved effigy still plainly to be seen.

The Window in Art and Litera ture.

Many a famous pic'ure has a win dow for its setting. Noah sendin forth the dove from the little cub window. The mother of Sisera l of ing out at a window as she crie through the lattice, "Why is h chariot so long in coming?" Siste Anne at her watch on top of th tower, who saw only a "great clou of dust coming this way." Charlott Corday, ever standing behind priso bars. Is it accident that in fiction a pleasant things are seen from within while pain and disappointment lur in ambush for those who look throug the wrong side of the window? A beggar child feels all the lonelies that she has no part in the Christma cheer which she regards from the outside of a lofty casement.

Poor Enoch Arden, tempted by th glowing window of Philip's house saw framed in that "comfortabl square of ruddy light" his happines and his despair. But from "Cas Guidi windows" the mistress of ma gicians looked down upon a littl child singing "O Bella Liberta" an 'leant upon the music as a theme for a masterpiece of art. It was in spiration that gave the name of Th Open Window to the magazine of th Shut-in society. Through it th dear feeble folk catch a glimse of th great, busy world, where their heav feet may not go. It is like a draugh of wine to them.

Raleigh should wake up along this line. We should stick together and help ourselves by helping each other.

Those who have capital should invest it in profitable enterprises at home, and avoid the painful experience of seeing it go up in smoke in some distant "Loom."

Has She Killed Herself.

CLEVELAND, O., July 3.-Miss Ollie Caulfield, daughter of A.S. Caulfield, a wealthy contractor, disappeared yesterday and her parents believe that she has killed herself. She is seventeen years old, well educated and a good musician. She has been very despondent since the death of her lover, Walter Calhoun, who died two days before the day set for their wedding. Vigorous search has been instituted, but no trace of her has yet been found,

[St. Louis Republic ]

"When General Grant returned to St. Louis after his famous tour around the world," said a Missourian, "1 heard him make a remark which removed from mind all the prejudices I ever had against him as the commander of the federal army of the United States.

"He stopped at the Southern hotel, and had a steady stream of callersold friends who had known him in his adversity and his poverty. I was sitting in the parlor one day when an elderly lady called and wanted to see General Grant. She was promptly admitted.

'General," said she, 'I don't sup pose you will remember me, as you have met so many people since I saw you last ?'

"'Madam,' said the general, 'I never yet forgot a friend. Don't you remember the day when some of your people took me out of the gutter, took me to your house and gave me a clean shirt? And don't you remember how you nursed me back to health and strength inside of two days? I hope you have forgotten an that, but I haven't I never shall name as horetofore. jel2 30d R. GRAUSMAN, M.
