A DARING ABDUCTION.

NORRISTOWN, Pa, March 10 -A dispatch from cummeytown, an out | Q H White, (rol) of the way village among the Stone J E Woolard. hills, in Marlboro township, several miles from Green Lans, a station ou the Perkiomen railroad, brings tid-· ings of a daring abdactiou. A carriage containing a lad about 18 years old and two women drove up to the public school house. The former knocked at the door and inquired for Katie Pflueger, a 12 year old pupil. The child came to answer the summons, and was quickly hustled into the carriage, and, as was since learned, dri en to Perkiomenville. From there the women valked the child to Zieglersville, where Katie and one of her abductors were seen to board a train Katie lived with Jacob Knoker, by whom she was adopted eleven years ago.

NO PLACE LIKE HOME.

He was writing an essay on the beauty of home life, says the Detroit Free Press, and with his pen held suspended in the air soliloquized thusly:

"There is no place like home"-"Papa," called a boy's voice at the door, "will you mend my sled?" "Go away sir. Don't you know better than to disturb me when I am writing Now that idea is gone and I must begin all over again. There is no place"-

It was a woman's voice this time. "Reginald, the gas is leaking like everything, and you must see the company and have it stopped."

"There is no place like home," began the wretched man, just as Han nali, the girl, thrust her head in to ask:

"Did you order the kindlen's?"

Then he seized his pen and wrote fluently for full five minutes before he gave up his wild dream of fame. "There is no place like home-for dis comfort, annoyances, cold, hungry and every kind of disturbance on the face of the earth, at the most oppor tune and trying moment "

The New York Voice is having a title with some over efficious postmasters who presume to exercise a sort of consorship over what shall pass through their postoffices. The Voice sent out a lot of papers to peo ple at various postoffices. These papers were paid for from a fund raised for that purpose. When the papers came to the postoffices the postmasters in a number of instances did not deliver the papers to the persons ad dressed, but immediately sat down and notified the Voice people by means of the "official card" that the papers were "not lifted." In many cases the bundles were not opened. Au inquiry sent out by the Voice ad dressed in a plain, sealed envelope to the people to whom the papers were addressed brought forth responses from hundreds who said the postmasters had not given them the papers and that they wanted them and didn't authorize any such notice of "papers not wanted" to be sent to the publishers. The Voice has notified the department and some postmasters will likely be made to know what their duties are. It is too frequently so that postmasters in country districts go beyond their official requirements. When mail matter comes to the office it must be delivered without comment. It is for the party to whom the mail is addressed to make remarks and give or ders to the postmaster, if any are needed.
