THE PEACE OF DEATH.

The Philadelphia Times, in speaking of the labor troubles in Idaho says:

The reports from Idaho say that "the crisis is passed and peace once more reigns in Coeur d'Alene."

Yes, there is peace in Idaho, but it is the peace of death. The rioters were the union employes of the mines in and about Coeur d'Alene. The union men had struck and non-union men had been employed on terms entirely satisfactory to employers and employed; and the ultimatum of the union strikers was in these words: "All non-union men must leave the State at once or the mines will be blown up and an attack on the non-union men commenced."

These strikers had evidently studied only the despotic government of the Czar, that has been well described as "a despotism tampered by assassination." They blew up bridges by dynamite to prevent troops from reaching them; they placed dynamite in the mills and mines and threatened to blow them up if the peaceable non-union laborers were not driven from the State; and they killed, maimed and drove away every workingman who did not bow to their revolutionary and murderous commands.

The military reached the scene of lawlessness and carnage to find the non-union men killed, wounded or fugitives, and peace was restored because the rioters had triumphed at every point. There is now peace in Idaho, but it is the peace of death.

Suppose that in the next turn of the wheel of fate, the non-union men shall be the stronger. Why should they not kill, maim and drive away every union workman and blow up bridges and mills and mines to gain peace? And, why should not highwaymen take life and property by the law of might, and proclaim peace when they had killed or driven away all owners of property and possessed it themselves? There would be peace in all these cases; but would it not be the peace of death?

The right of any man to labor in Idaho on terms satisfactory to himself and his employers is as sacred as is the right of the Governor to live; and how can there be peace when rioters, crimsoned with murder, make peace by brutally killing and maiming their fellows and seizing the property of others? It may be peace; but it is the peace of death.

THE PINKERTONS MUST GO.

The Knights of Labor in Philadelphia have started a crusade against the employment of the Pinkerton Detectives that will no doubt bring the indiscriminate employment of these men to an end. The Knights, and other labor organizations are combining to throw such light upon Pinkerton character as will make them less popular for employment against union men.

The word "gerrymander," derived from the name of Elbridge Gerry, Governor of Massachusetts in 1811, should be rightly pronounced with the "g" hard, though the dictionaries make it soft. Its victims as a rule are inclined to pronounce the whole thing a nuisance.

BOTH DETERMINED.

The situation at Homestead remains in a chafing, feverish condition. The troops are on the alert for outbreaks while the strikers seem to be just waiting for the time to come for them to march away. Both the troops and the men are expecting the arrival of non-union men and it is this that keeps the fever up.

At Pittsburg, the Carnegie mills are about deserted. The probabilities are that in the event the Carnegie's employ non-union men, the railroad men will refuse to haul freights for them, which of course forces them to yield or close their works. Strikes are now in order and are occurring at various points. Union men will not tolerate the employment of non-union men in any mill in which they work. It is thought that if the Carnegie's put non-union men in their mills that more bloodshed will result.

THE SITUATION AMONG STRIKERS.

The Idaho mines have resumed work. The cruelty and brutality of the miners were greatly exaggerated in the reports sent out. The situation at Homestead is not improved. General Snowden is preparing for the worst. Three thousand men employed in the Carnegie Mills at Pittsburg have gone out on a strike, and others at other points may follow.
