HEREAFTER.

When all life's storms are still

And all life's noises into calm have passed,
When rest and quiet come to us at last,
What matters good or ill?
What matters love or hate?
Calm hands are folded o'er a quiet breast,
The weary head is pillowed in sweet rest
And sorrow comes too late!
What matters wealth or fame?
The narrow grave is all that earth can give,
The deathless soul in other worlds shall live
And men forget our name.
What matters aught of earth?
The passing pictures of a shadowed dream,
The changing eddies of a turbid stream,
Sure these are nothing worth.

Why, then, despond, my friend?
The one thou lovest has but found at last
Sweet peace and calm and rest when toil is past,
And death is not the end!

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

It is said that General Beuregard, who believed that in a climate like that of Louisiana, cremation is a more sanitary way of disposing of the dead than burying, directed in his will that his body should be cremated, but as there was no crematory in Louisiana his directions could not be complied with.
