THE BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS.

A NEW AND VALUABLE FEATURE TO BE ADDED TO THIS BRANCH OF THE STATE GOVERNMENT.

The bureau of labor statistics, which was established in 1887, is now in charge of Mr. B. R. Lacy who was appointed the first part of March last. The quarters which had until then been assigned to the bureau were not very inviting and would naturally impress visitors with the idea that the bureau was of little service. Mr. Lacy with the approval of the board of public works had offices fitted up in the Supreme Court building, opposite the state library, and furnished them as they should have been furnished.

A reporter called on the commissioner a few days ago and found him quite busy with correspondence which had accumulated during his absence. Mr. Lacy, however, with his accustomed courtesy, put aside his work and explained to the reporter the purposes of the office and his own desire to make it one of the most useful branches of the state government.

In answer to a question Mr. Lacy said the bureau was established for purpose of enquiring into the needs of the laboring classes and ascertaining how they might be aided morally, materially and financially. The bureau had not the power (and did not desire it), said he to interfere between employer and employed; but was its function to gain as much information as possible concerning all matters directly affecting labor and lay it before the general assembly in order that that body may have facts to guide it towards intelligent legislation. Such information is for the public also, of course, and is published annually.

"How do you obtain this information?" asked the reporter.

"I have to rely almost solely on correspondence," replied Mr. Lacy. "The annual appropriation for the bureau is so small to allow personal visits to the several parts of the state, except the special reasons; and the bureau is dependent upon the voluntary replies to questions mailed to people of various callings throughout the state."

"Can you mention any material good that has been accomplished by the bureau?"

"I have been too short a time in charge of the office to answer that question as fully as I would wish, but I can say that an examination and comparison of the several annual reports issued by the bureau show that many minor evils which have been complained of have disappeared solely by calling public attention to their existence. Such, for instance, as the practice of paying wages in trade, which has been discontinued entirely."

"What branch of labor needs most attention?" was asked.

"So far as my observation goes during the short time I have been in the office, I should say the condition of the farmers and farm laborers needs careful investigation and thought more than that of any other class of what is known as the laboring class, because of the depression which has existed in agricultural affairs for several years

"I hear you intend to establish in connection with the bureau something like an intelligence office, can you give me your ideas concerning it?" asked the reporter.

"Yes; it occurred to me that there are many people in the state who want work of one kind or another, and it also occurred to me that this office might aid in finding employment for some of them at least. So I determined to make the bureau a medium through which employers and those seeking work might be brought together. After considering the matter I discovered that the state of Ohio had already established something of the kind under the direction of its labor commissioner, and the great good which has been accomplished there convinces me that something can be done here, though only on a small scale with the funds available"

"What plans have you adopted for putting the scheme into execution?"

"My plan is simply to place on file any applications for work that may be sent me and let employers know that these applications are here and that they might be able to obtain such assistance as they may need by correspondence with the bureau. The applications usually state what kind of work is desired, the kind of work the applicant has been engaged in, and other particulars that employers usually want to know."

"What kind of employment do you try to find for applicants?"

"Chiefly that kind known as skilled labor, such as mechanics, teaching, type writing, stenography, book keeping, salesmen, &c. But any one may apply whether skilled or not."

"Have you any applications on file?"

"Quite a number, and we receive them every day."

"Have you secured work for any of these applicants?"

"Yes; several, and most of them are good places, too."

"What does it cost applicants whom you succeed in helping?"

"Nothing at all except the postage required for the letters they themselves write."

"Has anyone written for information concerning applications in your office?"

"Yes. I had a letter a few days ago from a gentleman in a distant part of the state enquiring for a teacher for a large school next term."

"How did he know of these applications?"

"I saw an advertisement by him in one of the state papers and wrote to him in the interest of a young lady. He replied that he wanted a male teacher and asked me to procure him one."

"If you have no funds to advertise can you accomplish much?"

"No; that is the trouble I will have to rely largely on the well known generosity of the press to make this feature and its purposes known to the public. A few of the editors send me their papers regularly, and we always scan their advertising columns in the interest of applicants for work. I cannot expect to do much in this or any other direction without the aid of the newspapers."

The reporter left Mr Lacy's office impressed with the possibilities for good in this new feature, if its purposes can become generally known to the public, and the Visitor hopes the press will do what it can to aid Mr Lacy in helping those who in many instances cannot well help themselves.
