A ONCE NOTED DESPERADO
TURNS PREACHER.

Abe Buzzard, once noted as the "Terror of Welsh Mountain," is now a free man and a preacher. The board of pardons at Harrisburg, Pa., has released him from the eastern penitentiary of Pennsylvania on two grounds—one that he was wrongfully convicted on the charge which added nine years to his sentence, and the other that he had been "soundly converted" while in prison. For many a year the papers told of the doings of the "Buzzard gang" in the rugged wilderness covering adjacent sections of Lancaster, Chester and Berks county, Pa.

Many conflicting stories were told, so let us first hear Abe's: "I was an outlaw from necessity, not from choice, as the following brief outline of my early life will show: I was born on Christmas night, 1859, in a little log house near the Welsh mountains. I was one of a half dozen children born to poor but respectable and honest parents, who did all in their power to teach us our duty to God and our fellows. My father, John Buzzard, was a deeply religious man and named me for his favorite Biblical character—Abraham. When the rebellion started, my father was among the first to offer his services to his country and died fighting nobly in her behalf."

His mother married again, and there were quarrels. The six boys were driven out, Abe says, in childhood. Two girls, born to the second marriage, are and always have been honest. He goes on to tell how he committed one crime and was then charged with all others and harassed till he became an outlaw, and then concludes: "I was arrested several times and escaped as often, always fleeing to the mountains. While in hiding after my last escape I realized that God loved even me, and that his love would and could lead me from sin, as it did Paul of old. I resolved to return to the Welsh mountains as a missionary and preach the gospel of God's love and Christ crucified to my old companions and earnestly endeavor to save them from a further life of sin and shame."

So he surrendered early in 1885, and in spite of an agreement to the contrary, as he claims, was sent to serve out his 13 years' sentence Lancaster county tells a very different story. According to her citizens, "the old woman was a thief, and all the boys took after her. They followed her about and stole from the houses where she worked. They have all six been in jail, and finally Ike tried to give up Abe and get the $1,000 reward. There was a regular gang, two or three dozen of white and black men and women holding the Welsh mountains and living on the country."

Ike died in the penitentiary. The other four Buzzards reformed. The colored men got off with light sentences, and now Abe is a preacher. His first sermons were delivered in Philadelphia to the largest audiences the churches would hold, and preached well. Every hearer agreed on that.

The June number of Fetter's Southern Magazine (Fetter & Bush Publishing Company, Louisville) is replete with bright short stories, essays and poems. Among the story writers are Madison Cawein, George Griffith Fetter, and Mrs. A. D. Sayre. The essayists are J. Soule Smith and Calvin S. Brown while Angele Crippen contributes notes from the great Columbian Exposition in her usual entertaining style.

LOVE LED TO AN ASYLUM.

In the case of Henry Frick, of Norristown, Pa., who is eighty five years old, blind, cupid only led to the insane asylum. A lunacy commission decided last week that because Frick was eager to wed a second wife was no proof of insanity, and let the old man go. His children had caused the investigation. That victory spurred on the aged lover, who was enamored of a widow residing near Belfry station. But two physicians have concluded that Frick is insane, and he is now in the Norristown Asylum.

LAY OF SUMMER DAYS.

Richmond State.
"I would not sing away," the poet sadly cried; "Oh, let me sing one lay, and then to glory glide." The poet sang his lay, and then was taken sick. The coroner couldn't say who threw the brick. Down in the meadows are daisies 'mid the dew, but in Richmond town the people frown, and gently articulate as they exchange wearied greetings, and more fifty cents' worth of perspiration from their massive brows with fifteen cent handkerchiefs: "Is it hot enough for you?"

A LIVE LIZARD ON HER BREAST

A pretty stylishly dressed young woman walked into a New York jewelry store and asked to be allowed to look at some stick pins. She picked out a pin with a gold chain attached about six inches long. "Now I'd like you to fasten the end of the chain about the neck of this little animal," said the young woman, as she pulled a small box from her pocket and removed a green lizard about six inches long. The jeweller opened his eyes in astonishment as the lizard squirmed about the young woman's hand. "What," he exclaimed, "you don't mean to wear that lizard as an ornament, do you?" "Certainly, I do," replied the young woman. Mr. Sittner shuddered, but succeeded in attaching the chain about the reptile's neck, and the pretty girl stuck the pin in her coat and walked out with the peculiar green adornment over her breast.

SNAKES KILLED BY WHOLESALE.

John Litaker, of China Grove, N. C., felled a large oak tree and commenced to saw it up. In the third cut, about six feet up the tree, what appeared to be, blood followed the course of the saw, there being a considerable hollow in the log at that point. It was split open. The whole inside was filled with half torpid snakes of the water moccasin species. They were about two feet long, about an inch thick, and of a dark brown color. Mr Litaker promptly killed the entire squirming mass, and on a careful count there were found to be 214 snakes. On splitting open another cut of the log the two old snakes were found. They were in a half torpid condition also. They were also killed, making 216 snakes killed in one day, and because of the cool weather it was not a first class day for snakes.

THE ISSUE JOINED.

The National Government's fight to prevent the Sunday opening of the World's Fair is definitely on. Assistant District Attorney Hand has begun to drift a bill for an injunction to restrain the fair managers, and expects to file it in time to prevent the gates being opened tomorrow. Mr. Hand is following the orders of his chief, Mitchell, who conferred with Attorney General Olney at Washington regarding the Government's position in the question.
