A SLIGHT MISCONCEPTION.

They Didn't Realize How Much the "Purty Ones" Cost.

A tall young fellow wearing a heavy pair of shoes and a suit of clothes of which the trouser legs and the sleeves were too short for him, together with a gawky girl who had a brown sack, a red dress and a light yellow hat, stood looking into the window of an up town candy store.

It was chocolate day evidently, for there was nothing to be seen in the window but the dark brown confections. The two stood and gazed for fully ten minutes. Then the girl hunched the man in the ribs with her elbow and said, "Say, Jim them look mighty good."

"That they do, Marthy," answered Jim.

There was no movement on Jim's part to go into the store and buy some of the candy. On the contrary, he stood as if rooted to the spot and continued gazing through the window. Martha waited a few minutes longer, and then her longing for candy overcame her scruples. She hunched Jim in the ribs again and said, "Well, hain't ye goin' t' buy some?"

Jim blushed a little at this direct invitation and hesitated no longer. He took Martha by the arm, and together they went into the gaudy store.

"What kind ye want, Marthy?" asked Jim.

"Some of them there purty ones in the winder," replied Martha.

Jim turned to the trim young woman who had come to wait on him. "Gimme 5 cents' worth of that there," he said, pointing to the most expensive confection in the store.

"How much?" asked the young woman.

"The hull of 5 cents' worth," repeated Jim, with a lordly air, while Martha nudged close to him and whispered, "Don't be reckless, Jim."

The young woman behind the counter looked perplexed. She hesitated a moment, and then got a knife and cut one of the bonbons in halves. She took one of the pieces, wrapped it up and handed it to the dumfounded Jim.

"How much is that there stuff?" he gasped.

"A dollar and a quarter a pound," replied the trim young woman.

Jim would have fainted if he had known how. As for Martha, she caught her escort by the arm and said: "Come on, Jim. I bet we kin find a place where we kin git a hull bag full for 5 cents."

And together they sallied out leaving their diminutive 5 cents' worth behind them.—Buffalo Express.
