How Senator Black Proves to Confederate's Widow.

Corporate Treasurer told the following story the other day of how he proved a positive claim for the widow of a famous Confederate soldier: "I was Commissioner of Prisons at the time," said the gallant corporal. "I received a telegram one day from Lee, then Governor of Virginia, asking if he and Senator John Barbour, of Virginia, could see me if they came to Washington the next day. Of course, I answered certainly. They came to see what was needed by the settlement of the long delayed pension claim of Mrs. Cooper, widow of General Cooper, who was Adjutant General of the army in '61, and who went South and was Adjutant General of the Confederate army. He had served with credit in the Mexican war.

"I called the case from the files to my desk and went through it. The proof was complete in every respect, and the filing stamps showed that it had been for a year or so before I took office. In a few minutes I turned to Lee and said:

"Governor, there is just one trouble about this case.

"What is it?" he asked.

"Cowardice."

"Fitz flushed in an instant, as I knew he would—we had been friends for years. 'Sir said he, with an emphasis which startled my stenographer, who sat on the opposite side of the desk. General Cooper's bravery was unimpeached and unimpeachable.

"I am perfectly well aware of that," I replied. Putting my finger under the stamped date, which showed when the final evidence completing the case had been filed, I said: 'The case should have been allowed immediately thereafter.'

"Ah, I see," said General Lee. Slowly, he was a Confederate soldier.

I remarked that I did not wish to irritate his political sensibilities, but that he sure was making bull's eyes. I learned that it was a case where a superserviceable subordinate thought he was saving his Democratic predecessor, General Black, a possible embarrassment by pigeon-holing the claim and keeping it from his sight, otherwise I would not have experienced the pleasure I did in putting the case through and giving to the one old lady her due under the law. The certificates beat the Governor and the Senator down to Richmond.

WHAT OTHERS ARE DOING.

The Detroit Tribune has been consolidated wholly with the Evening News and the combined paper will be called the Detroit News. It will be published as an afternoon paper. The Sunday edition will continue to be known as the Detroit News-Tribune. Ralph H. Booth, publisher of the Tribune, retires.

The Peoria, Ill., Herald-Transcript has moved into its new building, and within a few days its big new press will be installed. When everything is running smoothly, the management promises a formal opening to patrons and friends.

The Newcastle, Pa., Herald has just concluded a very successful voting contest which it says added several hundred subscribers to its list and at the same time created a healthy interest in the paper. The contest was for the six most popular young women in Newcastle and such was the interest in the race that the board of judges, assisted by the business department of the Herald, spent the entire night counting the ballot. The winner of the first prize, received 99,887 votes. The prize winners were given a trip to Atlantic City.

The New York American is giving away five dollar bills every day. The scheme is that a man from the American visits different sections of New York every day, having in his possession twenty five-dollar bills. The first person that he sees with the American in his pocket, he addresses, then presents him with the money. One of the conditions of the scheme is that the name of the paper must be plainly displayed in the owner's pocket. The scheme has worked successfully and more folks have been seen with the American than there were bills to go around.

SUPREME COURT REFUSES.

In the exceptional case of ex-Major M. E. McQueen, of Durham, for contempt, in having attacked Judge Ward in Durham, after a hearing before the Supreme Court of North Carolina, a writ of habeas corpus was this morning denied. A written opinion in the matter will be handed down later.

The case is one that has called for much thought and discussion, particularly in this part of the State.

"The Fortune Teller."

Music lovers in particular, and theatre-goers in general, will welcome the announcement that "The Fortune Teller" is to be the attraction at the Academy of Music Monday evening, September 11th. Not since the days of Gilbert and Sullivan had a comic opera, which so surely deserves the name, been presented in this country. It is the joint work of Victor Herbert and Harry B. Smith, both of whom have many successes to their credit. The music is of the popular order without being trashy, while the book abounds in situations that are genuinely funny. There is no resort to burlesque play or the methods that obtain on the variety stage. There are no interpolated songs, the lyrics being part and parcel of the story in a word. Milton and Sargent Aborn have adhered to the best traditions of the comic opera stage in the sumptuous revival. The company interpreting "The Fortune Teller" is one of uniform excellence, numbering 60 people in all, prominent among whom are Grace Orr Myers, Irene Langford, Hugh Cameron, Herman Hirschberg, Grafton Baker, James McElhern, Harry Turpin, James Fowney, Maxim de Groat, Ivy Davis and Flossie Foreman.

Man Who Jumped Overboard Identified.

Savannah, Ga., Sept. 6.—The man who committed suicide by jumping from the steamship Berkshire while en route from Baltimore to Savannah August 24th and who was registered under the name of J. E. Wentworth, has been identified as Jerome E. Blanc, of Washington. With his father, he lived until 1897 in Savannah, when the family moved to Washington.

Young Blanc was a traveling salesman for a wholesale drug firm of Baltimore and had his headquarters in that city, living on Franklin street. He had been missing from his boarding house there some two months before he started on the fatal trip to Savannah.

He had written friends in this city of his intended visit to them. It was through them that Captain Pratt, of the Berkshire, received such information that he was able to make the investigation in Baltimore that led to the discovery of "Wentworth's" identity. The dress suit case and some of the other articles left on the ship were identified by the Baltimore people with whom Blanc boarded.

Asked Permission to Kill Himself.

Philadelphia, Sept. 6.—Intending to commit suicide, John Elliott, who lives at Third and George streets, in this city, went to his employer, B. B. Hill, and said:

"May I have a day off?"

"Why?" asked Mr. Hill.

"I want to go and commit suicide," calmly replied Elliott. When the employer recovered from his surprise he said:

"No, you cannot go."

"Oh, very well," answered Elliott, and saying good-bye, walked out of the office.

At 9 o'clock that night Elliott boarded a ferryboat at Vine street and when in mid-stream leaped over the railing and found a watery grave in the Delaware river. His friends did not know of his death until this morning, when his body was found floating in the river.

Elliott, it is believed, ended his life because of his deep grief for his mother, who died about a year ago.
