the request of the judge advocate, is ties on the point raised by the plea in The question is one of great importance Corbett and used every effect to have sentences of dismissal already imposed rendered nugatory. It is claimed that the court should have been convened by act of 1885, instead of by the superine tendent of the haval academy, under the act of 1874, as amended by the aid

The board of investigation, which has produced the data upon which all ed, is expected to adjourn today, and this indicates that the end of the trial of midshipmen for hazing is not far distant, though it is known that there will be others. The board will not be dissolved, but will be ready to renew its investigations if the condition of affairs at any time made it necessary.
Shortly after the opening day the court overruled the plea in bar of the accused.

Melvin's counsel then submitted an additional plea, raising the contention that the act of 1903, was inoperative because the superintendent of the nu val academy had falled to make rules and regulations in regard to liming which the plea alleged he was required o do under the ac Judge Advocate Harrison stated that the act required no definition but simply authorized the superintendent to make rules to suppress hazing. The court overruled the plea, Midshipman Melvin then entered a plea of not guilty to the charge and specifications.

The prosecution called fourth class man Theodore H. Winters to the stand, He said that early in December Mebvin had come to his room and put him on his head because he had looked at him. He said that he had gone on his head from ten to twenty times and was laughing all the time. He fixed the date as December 9, 1905, and said that Midshipman Sloan of the fourth classwas present.

John E. Sloan of Greenville, S. C., said that he had seen Winters stood on his head at the order of the accused. Both of them were laughing, he Midshipman Alger H. Dressel, of the fourth class, said that he had been told by Melvin to learn to bex the compass in a week and he did not do it. Melvin, he said, had then required him to do the "sixteenth" about twenty-five treated him in a friendly way, Midshipman Scott McParlane stated that he was Dressel's room mate and had heard Melvin give him an order to do something.
