(By the Associated Press.) Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 28.-A murder

rial, the outcome of which will establish an important precedent in legal and military circles, was called here today in the criminal branch of court. Lieutenant Ralph D. Drury and vate John Dowd of the Ninth United States Infantry, were placed on trial charged with the murder of William Crowley, 18 years old, who on Septi ber 10, 1903, was killed near the United States arsenal by Private Dowd, acting under instructions from Lieutenant Drury.

Crowley and a number of other boys said to have been caught stealing inside the arsenal grounds, were pur-sued by soldiers and Crowley was shot after he had gotten a considerable distance outside the arsenal limits. The question at issue is:

"Has a United States soldier the authority to kill a man outside of government preperty who is suspected of a crime within government property? Many maintain that as the alleged crime of Crowley's was committed within government property the soldiers were justified in pursuing the man as they did.

Before he died, however, Crowley nade a statement, in which he denied he was inside the arsenal, asserting that he was sitting on a doorstep, be came frightened at the sight of the onrushing soldiers and ran. He said he heard a command to halt, that he did
