other formalities. Early in the discussion a conflict arose on the floor between members who wished different forms of representation at the conventions of the new society. It was proposed that every church of a hundred members should be entitled to one delegate and another for every additional 100 members. This brought a storm of protest from several ministers, who will have been completed by next sum-mer. Within a short time Mr. Bee Alleclared each church should have two delegates, no matter how small its gala effect. festations of woman at such time and place that passing from the clubhouse along the grandstand to the field pavilion is like perusing a page from Paul de Kock. It is chiefly in the clubhouse, of course, that one sees the real fashionable folk. Women of fashion there are in the grandstand, especially at the end near the clubhouse, but those belonging to the most exclusive sets, as a rule, are to be found only on the veranda set apart for members of the Jockey Club and their friends. Starting at the grandstand's near end, the tone tapers steadily all the way to the other extremity. So gradual is the change, however, that the better end of the field stand is little different from the less fashionable part of the more pretentious pavilion. But it is in the "little stand" that the differences are most marked. There the transition is so rapid that one hardly is astonished to find in the end women whose attire is innocent of any attempt at
