Woman Tries to Kill Officer and is Sent to Jail—Substantial Increase in Taxable Property—Personal News and Notes.

(Special to The Times) Durham, N. C., July 17.—When the recorder's court opened this morning at 10 o'clock for the hearing of Fernie Foster, charged with selling, he was not about and for a bond of $200. The case was run down by Detective C. A. Mayfield, who had been here employed by the city. A growing belief that the near-beer stangs had been selling the real stuff caused the city to ask the Baldwin agency for a man. He stopped at the Hopkins house and there bought some of the booze from Foster. It came from one of the night-beer joints and City Attorney Everett had it analyzed. It was the proper stuff, was 3.81 per cent alcohol, more than the law allows. Foster skipped his bond and will not be here to give testimony in the case. The officers know whose place it is but there is no one to give testimony.

Judge Sykes yesterday afternoon sent Lucy Gill to the workhouse after hearing the testimony in a case in which she is charged with attempting to kill Deputy Belvin. The woman had been notified by Justice Gunter that she must give up some property and claim and delivery papers were served upon her. Mr. Belvin made the visit in his capacity as deputy and she started at him with an axe. She wasn't smart enough and he took the weapon from her. She was then brought to the cell and later tried. She has fought the officers before, but generally gets whipped.

Mr. Tomlinson studied at Trinity College under the instruction of Professors Mordecai and McIntosh. He goes into the profession well-prepared at the law schools.

Twenty-five young men are preparing to leave tonight and ten or more left today for Morehead City, where they will camp this summer for a period of several weeks. Mayor Webb, of Morehead, is watching after the young fellows, who have a cook with them and will keep house in tents. They hope to live on fish and at an expense of 75 cents daily. Secretary Hunter writes that the water is fine and nothing could be better.

The final work on the tax books is being done today and the standing of the county will then be determined. Owing to the tardiness in the corporation excesses it will be hard to ascertain whether the growth of the county has been rapid or not. It is believed that in every department of the city there has been substantial increase along the line.

UP TO THE PRESIDENT

What Will He Do With the BILL?

Question Has Become the By-word in Washington—Will be a Grave Moment for the New President When Bill is Laid Before Him.

(Special to The Times) Washington, July 17.—Will the president sign?

With the end of the conference over the now-famous Payne-Aldrich bill, close at hand, the question has become the by-word of Washington.

Some ask: Will the president have the courage to O. K. the bill? Others: Will the president have the courage to refuse to sign the bill?

It will be a grave moment for the new president when the Payne-Aldrich bill is laid before him for his signature. Upon his action will in all probability hang the success or failure of his presidency. In the moment that he decides what course he will pursue as to signing or refusing to sign he will be making or unmaking his political future.

And as a matter of fact, no one can say whether as a political move it would be wise for the president to do one thing than the other, because no one can read the future for a certainty.

Here is the situation the president finds himself in:

On the one hand he stands at the head of the party of protection; he was elected president of the United States with a campaign fund furnished by the sugar trust, the steel trust, the oil trust and the other big industrial combinations. When the corporations contributed to the republican campaign fund they well understood the tariff was to be revised. It was understood also between the republican campaign managers and the corporations which depend upon high tariff rates for their excessive profits, that in return for their assistance, financial and otherwise, in electing a republican president, the tariff rates effecting the goods in which they deal would be "taken care of."

In accordance with this understanding, the tariff was revised. It was revised in such a manner as to make more absolute the domination of American markets by the tariff made trusts.

Now comes the time for the president to play his part and sign the bill. If he refuses to sign it, the stand-patters of his party, who are in absolute control of the political machine which nominates presidents and elects them with corporation-contributed campaign funds, will turn against him, charging him with deserting the republican policy of protection.

If the president signs the bill the stand-patters, Messrs. Aldrich, Cannon, Dalsell, Smoot, et al, will worship him as a great protection god, as will the special interests which control republican politics. By signing President Taft will stand high in the estimation of the "machine," and will get a renomination or anything it is within the power of that excellently disciplined organization to give.

The president would have easier sailing in complying with the requirements of the machine, which made him president, were it not that he made some promises to the people.

At Milwaukee, September 24, 1908, he said:

"It is my judgment that a revision of the tariff in accordance with the pledge of the republican platform will be, on the whole, a substantial revision downward."

The Payne-Aldrich measure, when last heard of was still revision upward.

Mr. Taft made a more important statement a little further down in the same speech:

"Much criticism has been made because of the fact that in some of the protected industries the product is sold abroad and in foreign markets at a less price than that at which they are sold here."

Under such circumstances, said Mr. Taft, "it must be admitted" that the tariff is greater than the differential between the cost of production at home and abroad, and that it should therefore be reduced."

To live up to this pledge the president would have to require that the Payne-Aldrich bill be changed from beginning to end. The testimony before the ways and means committee was that very many manufacturers protected by high tariffs maintained two price lists, one for American trade, and only for export trade. The custom of the protected manufacturers was to sell to foreigners from 15 to 25 per cent cheaper than to consumers in the United States.

In accepting the nomination July 28, 1908, Mr. Taft said that the tariff ought to be revised, and the republican platform promised that it would be, on the basis of equalization of cost of production at home and abroad, plus a reasonable profit. There has been no attempt whatever to revise the tariff on this basis. When data as to the labor cost in foreign countries has been received, Senator Aldrich has seen to it that it was suppressed.

Without the aid of statistics as to European labor cost, however, it may easily be shown that the promise of revision on the basis of equalization of cost of production was wholly disregarded. In more than one place, and what everyone wants to know is, What is President Taft going to do about it? For instance, the labor cost in the cotton manufacturing industry in the United States is 26 per cent. If the workmen in Europe received no pay whatever, the amount of protection to equalize the labor cost here and abroad would be 26 per cent. Yet the average per cent of tariff rate fixed by the Payne-Aldrich bill on cotton products is 47.14 per cent. The same condition applies to various schedules. From the standpoint of revision in the interests of the people, the Payne-Aldrich bill is a delusion and a snare.
