

To Real Estate Dealers:

Almost any piece of real estate in this city or near by can be "sold"--if the owner is willing to sacrifice not only his legitimate profits but some of his original investment. In that case the owner is, also, "sold."

For, in or about this city, there is to be found a buyer for any piece of real estate WHO WILL PAY WHAT IT IS WORTH--and this ALWAYS means a profit to the seller, unless he has paid a scandalously high price himself.

The old point, "FIND THE MAN," persists, of course. And the old solution, SENSIBLE ADVERTISING, remains the best one. To apply the solution to your case you must simply size the matter up in a cold-blooded way, and decide for yourself to use the newspaper.

You should use the one that reaches the PEOPLE WHO HAVE MONEY TO INVEST. That proposition will lead you in a straight line to our counting room

The readers of this newspaper are readers of its advertisements. They are urged to be always. "Ad-reading" and "ad-answering" are preached to our readers as cardinal virtues in modern living. They read ads. They buy advertised things. THEY ARE ABLE TO BUY REAL ESTATE. THEY READ REAL ESTATE ADS. THEY WILL READ YOURS.

Now is the Time to Look for a Revival of Real Estate Activity. Push it Along

DR. FREDERICK COOK GIVEN AN OVATION UPON HIS ARRIVAL AT THE CITY OF COPENHAGER

The crown prince of Denmark and representatives from national civil and scientific organizations greeted the explorer at the pier while the crowds cheering vociferously, milled about them beyond the cope of the police.

The police tried to form an opening for Cook to walk to an automobile, but for a time this was impossible. Shouting and throwing their hats in the air the men lost themselves in their enthusiasm, while the women cheered and waved their handkerchiefs. Some even attempted the "Hobson greeting" for the explorer.

Finally after a great deal of difficulty Cook managed to get down the gang-plank and at the sight of him the crowds gave vent to their enthusiasm without stint. Slowly a road was cleared through the press of humanity and Cook was bundled into the automobile. Then started a triumphal journey towards the Hotel Phoenix, where accommodations had been reserved for him.

All along the route the jam was so great that the car moved at a snail's pace and frequently had to stop to avoid running down the excited mobs who rushed into the street in front of the machine, shouting in Danish and cheering tumultuously.

Crowds had surrounded both the American legation and the Phoenix hotel, but as soon as it was learned that the explorer had started for the hostelry the crowds surged in that direction.

A number of persons were slightly injured by being squeezed and trampled, but none were seriously hurt. As the interviewers gathered around Cook in the Phoenix hotel he said:

"I have found the north pole. Scientists must decide for themselves whether I am speaking the truth or not. I shall submit the evidence to them in absolute assurance that they will find the claim justified."

As soon as Cook arrived at the special apartments set aside for him in Hotel Phoenix he was immediately surrounded by representatives of various organizations and nearly crushed. The members of the geographical society on hand were so enthusiastic that they proceeded promptly to drink the explorer's health. The hotel became a pandemonium filled with wildly cheering, jostling masses of people, all trying to get near enough to the American to grasp his hands. Many who had been commissioned to extend invitations tried to fight their way through the jam by sheer force and this nearly precipitated a riot.

During a lull in the uproar Minister of Commerce Sansan delivered a speech to the assemblage in the hotel, welcoming Dr. Cook to the city and inviting him to attend the banquet tonight. Dr. Cook arose to reply and the noise broke out afresh. Finally he managed to say that he would gladly accept the invitation and that he intended remaining here for several days.

Cook has shaved off his beard and mustache and does not much resemble the published pictures of himself.

A flotilla of torpedo boats in the harbor thundered salutes as the Colonial Danish steamship came into the harbor with the daring explorer, who has planted the American flag at the top of the world. Dr. Cook's eyes dimmed with tears at the scene of his triumph.

The American yacht Feodora, owned by W. Gould Brokaw, with the American legation party, consisting of Minister Maurice Francis Eagan and Secretary Charles Richardson, followed the Hans Eggede into port with American flags fluttering proudly from her mast peaks.

The harbor was alive with yachts and steamers, all bearing great crowds of people who cheered Dr. Cook and thronged the rail trying to get a glimpse of him aboard the Hans Eggede. The Danish and American flags, intertwined, fluttered from every peak.

The piers and house-tops were black with excited, shouting masses of humanity and flags were strung from window to window. The police and city guards found it nearly impossible to handle the crowds about the ways while the police boats found maritime traffic in such a snarl from the unprecedented number of boats in the harbor that the Eggede and the Feodora could scarcely effect a landing.

The scene was stirring and for a moment a mighty silence settled over the multitude. But only for a moment; then cheerink broke out which echoed and re-echoed. The inland and other torpedo boats in the harbor which had belched forth the world's welcome were lying ponderously at anchor, giving a martial aspect to the impressive picture.

In response to the enthusiastic greeting Dr. Cook stood upon the bridge of the Eggede waving his hand. His slender figure was easily recognized and the enthusiasm broke out afresh.

The steamer Melchior, bearing the members of the royal geographical society party, of which Dr. Cook is the official guest, met the Hans Eggede 25 miles outside the harbor and followed her in with the Feodora. The festivities which commenced upon his arrival will be continuous throughout Dr. Cook's stay in Copenhagen.

The American legation was decorated resplendently with the flag of the United States. It was surrounded by a great throng.

So great was the enthusiasm felt in the coming of the American explorer that preparations for his reception and entertainment went forward all night. Consequently there were conflicting arrangements, but guiding hands soon brought order.

Invitations of every sort poured upon the American legation directed to Dr. Cook and it was soon made evident that if he took part in all the festivities planned he would soon be wishing himself back at latitude 90 with its scant fare.

Hundreds of telegrams from America and all parts of the globe were at the legation awaiting the arrival of Dr. Cook. They were mostly congratulatory.

Besides the reception of Dr. Cook in audience by the king, numerous entertainments were planned. They included banquets by the minister of commerce, the municipal council of Copenhagen, American Minister Eagan and the Royal Geographical Society.

As the day advanced the enthusiasm increased. The City Guard had to patrol the streets around the American legation all day, while launches bearing parties steamed about the harbor inspecting Hans Eggede as if it had played some part in the discovery of the pole.

Fireworks were exploded and those on board the Feodora planned a regular "Fourth of July" display by buying Roman candles and skyrocketers. The great number of strangers in town was an impressive feature of Dr. Cook's reception. They came from the continent and the British Isles and all were anxious to meet Dr. Cook. There were many scientists and geographers among them. Accommodations were scarce, but that did not matter. Many persons did not go to bed at all but stood upon the harbor front all last night expecting every minute that the Hans Eggede would arrive. Thousands thus went without sleep, but this caused no diminution in the enthusiasm.

A big banquet will be tendered Dr. Cook tonight in the city hall, when he will formally meet the minister of commerce, the members of the city council and the royal geographical society. Two of the most interesting personages at this banquet will be Mrs. Amundsen and her daughter, who were among the last white people to say goodbye to Dr. Cook at Cape York before he plunged into the northern solitudes.

The Americans in the city spent the day celebrating in their own way. A number of American tourists had hurried into the city from European and British ports and the entire city was in a jolly mood to honor Dr. Cook.

Newspaper correspondents were numerous in the Danish capital and they attempted to get to the explorer to get out of their sight. Cook's baggage excited considerable interest, for it was in his luggage that the corroborative proof of his wonderful discovery rested.

The authorities on Arctic explorations here (they expressed fear that Dr. Cook will find it impossible to produce absolute proof of his discovery of the pole, despite the fact that experts who have examined his records say they are accurate as far as it is possible to test them.

Is the New Administration Making Good?

In a pulpit to the sermon at the Tabernacle Baptist church Sunday night the pastor will discuss this question, following up to what he said some weeks ago about what the people had a right to expect of the administration. The city fathers and public at large will be interested in the discussion.

Service begins at 8 o'clock. At 11 a. m. the pastor's subject will be, "Pursuing the First Love."

Y. W. C. A. RECEPTION

The New Girl's at Meredith College Given a Delightful Reception Last Night.

The social life of the school began at Meredith College last night with the annual reception given the new girls by the Y. W. C. A. This is always given on the first Friday night after school opens and offers an excellent opportunity for every one to get acquainted.

The rooms of the lower floor of Faircloth Hall were all thrown together and by eight o'clock they were thronged with a jolly merry crowd of school girls, renewing old acquaintances and making new ones.

Attractive little cards with the suggestive sketch of an old dog looking down patronizingly at a little chicken were distributed, the game being to get as many names as possible on your card. The prize, a billiken hat pin was won by Miss Olive Boone, one of the new students.

Apples bearing quotations were also distributed, the old girls matching their quotations with those of the new girls. Both contests created a lot of fun and proved to be a successful mixer. There were several delightful solos from Miss Minnie Hayes and then just before the crowd dispersed, Miss Elizabeth Lovell entertained them in her own inimitable way with a reading from Uncle Remus.

CARRIERS AT THE GEM.

Twenty-five Times Carriers the Guests of Gem Theatre.

Last night twenty-five, small boys were made happy and twenty-five pairs of hands applauded the numbers on the program at the Gem Theatre, and why not?

The carriers of The Evening Times were the guests of the management of this popular place of amusement, and never before did a more appreciative audience greet the vaudeville stunts, nor more wide-eyes view the moving pictures. For one hour joy reigned supreme in their little hearts and it was with a sigh that they fled out of the building, but with scampering feet they hurried home to unfold great tales of the evening's amusement. Twenty-five little fellows are today singing the praises of the show and giving vent to heartfelt expressions of the pleasure they had last night. Great fellows, these.

Twenty Injured in Riot. (By Leased Wire to The Times) New York, Sept. 4.—Twenty persons were injured, three seriously, today in a riot between union tailors and strike-breakers in Williamsburg. Friends of the combatants joined in the battle, which was watched by a crowd of 1,000.

LAKE STEAMER LOST PROPELLER

By wireless from steamship Puritan, off South Haven, Sept. 4.—The steamship Mackinaw of the Crawford steamship line, with 250 aboard, on her maiden voyage from Saugatuck to Chicago, broke down with a wrenched propeller shaft before dawn today 50 miles off Grand Haven and drifted helplessly for several hours, blowing her siren to attract help as she carried no wireless equipment. The steamship Puritan answered the call and stood by the Mackinaw after the captain of the latter vessel had requested Captain Crawford, of the Puritan, to reach Grand Haven by wireless and order tugs sent out.

Holiday At Postoffice. Monday, September 6th, being Labor Day, a national holiday, the usual holiday hours will be observed at the postoffice in this city. The money order and registry departments will be closed. The general delivery and stamp windows will be open from 8 to 10 a. m. and the city letter carriers will make only one delivery, that being the first trip in the morning. The rural carriers will not make any trip on that day.
