THE VOICE.

I hear it in the twilight; I catch it in the dawn,
When all the eastern skylight is laced with rose and fawn;
It cries to me in the noonday amid the cold or heat;
It shouts to me in the forest, it hails me in the street;
It harks its sudden bidding on many an upland track;
Out of the days departed it summons me—"Come back!"
With sweet and tender tremors the heart of me it thrills;
I cast aside old sorrows; I rise above old hills;
Whate'er the goal I'm seeking, I need nor spur nor goad,
I am a gypsy vagrant footing a rainbow road;
The tide about me beating leaps swift from ebb to blood,
And reawakened Aprils go singing through my blood,
Throughout the scheme of being I find nor fleck nor flaw;
The vivid joy of living, that is my only law;
It may be but a moment the rapture-dream endures,
And yet,—ah, shining marvel!—what weariness it cures!
O voice of Youth, O echo from Time's far-trodden track,
Out of the days departed still call it me—"Come back!"
