EX-GOV. AYCOCK SPEAKS

At Eastern Carolina Training School Commencement

This is the First Commencement of This School and Consequently There Are No Sweet Girl Graduates—The Enrollment for the First Year 172—The Summer Session For Teachers Begins Next Week.

(Special to The Times.)

Greenville, N. C., May 21—Yesterday was the first commencement day of the East Carolina Teachers' Training School, and the orator has been ex-Governor Aycock. The commencement exercises began last evening when a music recital was given in the school auditorium by Miss Fannie Mae Bishop and Mr. Austin, of the school faculty, complimentary to the students and their friends. The program today wasn't long, but every feature was enjoyed.

At today's commencement the phrase sweet girl graduate can't be used, for there were no graduates, but the students, 172 in number, mostly young women, presented an attractive appearance when they marched into the auditorium singing, "Ho, for Carolina." The singing began while the students were in the distance. There was a sound of sweet melody, but from whence it came could not be learned until the young ladies all dressed in white put in their appearance. It was a scene beautiful to behold, and there was inspiration in the way the young people sang. After prayer by Rev. B. F. Huske the students sang America, and this was followed by a chorus, "Welcome Spring" and a Gondolier's song. The speaker of the day was introduced in fitting words by President Robert H. Wright.

Governor Aycock began his speech by paying tribute to Governor Jarvis, which was received with applause by the large audience. Speaker said that he would make the same speech that he had made elsewhere, the same speech that he had been making all his life. It was a plea for universal education. Once it wasn't popular to talk about educating everybody, but now the speaker said everybody believed in educating everybody. Education was defined as bringing out best that is in man or thing. Speaker made use of homely illustrations in pressing home his arguments for universal education. It was stated that education made a man truthful. It gave him power to keep in reserve his powers until needed, it made him of service to his fellowmen. The education that would cause a man or woman to attain unto something high, and then fall to pull other folks up to the same high standard was condemned.

Mr. Aycock made a strong plea for universal education so that the world about might learn to appreciate the good things of life. There is no need of great orator or great musician if the world around is unable to appreciate the song or the speech.

In speaking of the need of educating the people that they might appreciate the good things of life, speaker told of a trip to the deaf and dumb institute. He created merriment by saying: "I made all kinds of speeches and at all kinds of places when I was governor, for I liked to talk, and I almost talked myself to death, but Bob Glenn came along and saved my reputation, and now I am a man of few words." At the deaf institute he thought he wouldn't have to make a speech, but he was called upon to talk, but couldn't get beyond: "Little children, I am so glad to be with you today."

The new Queen of England and her associates in the Anti-American Alliance, expected to be an effective organization for eliminating Americans from the English court. Queen Mary is known to be actively opposed to the appearance of Americans in royal society, and at one time formed a definite alliance with her two friends the Duchess of Buccleuch to exclude Americans from all functions which they supervised. The Duchess of Portland is shown on the upper left hand side of the picture. Queen Mary at the right and the Duchess of Buccleuch below.

Thousands of people in North Carolina have heard the speech that was made today, but is grows better as the years go by. The speaker himself said it was the same speech he had made before he was twenty-one, but that it was more elaborate and better. The speaker was given an ovation when he began and when he concluded and again it was proven that there is no man in the state whom the people would rather hear discuss educational topics. It is the same old story, but it grows sweeter and better with each telling.

At the conclusion of the address the young ladies sang, "I Know a Bank," and after some announcements by President Wright, the audience sang the Old North State. The benediction was pronounced by Rev. J. H. Shore, and the first commencement of the state's youngest educational institution was brought to a close.

First year of school has been a good one, the enrollment has been 172. The summer session for teachers will begin next week, and already it has been found necessary to secure rooms for teachers in the city. Greenville and East Carolina are proud of the institution.

Two years ago the merits of hollow concrete-block construction were hardly known in Scotland. Since then a number of tenement houses, cottages and villas have been erected with these blocks in and near Glasgow, the experiment convincing the builders that they cost less than stone for buildings, are equally as substantial, and more pleasing to the eye.

mon Shepard did not play his part in the acquittal of Koonce Patterson. It was the same part that he assumed in the Reuben Barbee trial. He made it easier for the lawyer's old friend, "Reasonable Doubt." Shepard's testimony gave every opportunity for its exercise in this latest, just as he did in the Barbee case nine months ago.

Patterson was attended by his brother throughout the trial. The case attracted quite a lot of attention here and elsewhere.

Is Woman Extravagant?

Professor Munsterberg, writing upon American problems, has come in the course of things to the subject of "The Intemperance of Women." He speaks of the manner in which women have set themselves against the vices of men, and covertly resents, it would seem, the credit which has been accorded to women for resisting vices which have not tempted them. When it comes to actual temptation, however, he appears to think that they can show themselves as noresistant as their brothers.

"Can there be any doubt," he inquires, "for the neutral onlooker of American society on every social level that man's squandering money for beverages which he enjoys is still outdone by woman's squandering of money on gowns which she enjoys?" and he adds: "From the higher economic point of view the sums which the feminine members of the American family are spending on their exterior decoration are entirely out of proportion to those which are given for wholesome food, for the care of the body.—Chicago Tribune.
