We bet both Mr. W. C. Dowd and the Charlotte Observer do not think much of the North Carolina edition of the National Magazine. Under a cut of Mr. Dowd the magazine printed these words: "W. C. Dowd, editor of the Charlotte Observer."

This is statesmanship, but under the circumstances as we see them from this distance, it is mighty hard to do. Newspaper men have many trials and tribulations, but the man who lets his personal feeling influence him is too little to last long. He is not representing himself; he is depended on to enlighten the people; to give the facts regardless of what he may think or how he may feel. To even 'color" a report to suit his feelings is not to be tolerated.
