COTTON CASE HEARD TODAY

Famous Case In Which Frank R. Hayne and Others Are Defendants.

A TECHNICAL QUESTION

Question for Hearing Today is One Growing Out of Lower Court's Decision That a "Corner" Had No Direct Effect on Interstate Commerce — The Indictment Charges the Defendants With Conspiring to Buy Enough Cotton to Control the Price and Then Sell at Arbitrary Prices and That Such Action Would Obstruct Trade and Injure Legitimate Buyers.

Washington, Nov. 9.—One of the most notable cases ever brought under the Sherman anti-trust act was on docket for consideration in the United States supreme court, under the popular title, "Cotton Corner case." The case arose out of an indictment in New York of James A. Patton, Eugene G. Seelock, Frank R. Hayne and William P. Brown on the charge of conspiracy in violation of the Sherman law. Several counts of the indictment were held invalid by the United States circuit court for southern New York.

The government appealed to the supreme court from this holding. Technical questions arising out of the appeal were up for argument today before the court. The indictment charged the defendants with conspiring to buy cotton on the New York Cotton Exchange to control the price and then to sell at arbitrary prices. The defendants were charged with knowing that the natural results of their acts would be to obstruct trade in cotton and injure bonafide spinners and manufacturers by compelling them, in buying cotton to compete with "short sellers" who would be purchasing under the abnormal conditions produced by the "corner." The lower court held that "running a corner" on the market was not a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. This holding was based on the theory that a "corner" had no direct effect upon interstate commerce.
