Bankruptcy.

The following judicial opinion delivered in the Mayor's Court of N. York, on the operation of the Binkrupt Syftem of the Uni. ted States, istne firft on the fubject. It will be found of confiderable importance to the commercial community, whose interests are intimately affected by the constructions and adjudications of the extent and force of this Statue. The decision, we understand, has been acquiesced in.

New-York Mayor's Court. Widdington & Auchinvole, affignees of M'Cready, versus Morris.

This is an action of Trover, brot by the affignees of a bankrupt to recover the value of certain goods delivered to the defendant, in fatisfaction of a just debt, under the following circumstances.

The bankrupt finding his affairs desperate, on the 28th of August, being Saturday fuffered his note to be protested, and was denied to a clerk of the creditor, who came to demand payment, and as he afterwards contelled, purpolely to avoid feeing his creditors or his agent. On the 29th, Sunday, he delivered parcels of goods to a creditor (who found him taking an invoice of his flock) in satisfaction of his debt, and on the same day the defendant (also a bona fide creditor, for money lent to the amount of 200 dollars) called on him, and requested that he would deliver goods in fatisfaction of his debt, which after hesitation was agreed to by the bankrupt, who faid, that as he could not go on, the defendant might take goods in payment, and thereupon delived him goods to the amount of 26, 12-100 dollars, in order, as was expressed at the time, to cover by this excels any loss on the fale of the goods at auction. The defendent did not at the time of receiving the goods, threaten any profecution for his debt.

On Monday, the 30th, commisfion of Bankruptcy was fued, Plaintiffs were afterwards duly appointed affigures, and demand made of the goods. On this case the following questions are raised for the determination of the court:

ift. Was the denial to the clerk of the creditor on the 28th, an act of Bankrupicy?

ed. Did the delivery of the goods to the defendant, vest any property in him?

The opinion of the court on the fecond point, will render a minute investigation of the first unnecessary; but as it has been raised, we will notice the difference between our statue and those of England on this

The act of bankruptcy by the English statue, is described simply by the terms, "beginning to keep his or her house, or otherwise to absent him or hersels" 1 Jac. I. 115 and the courts have construed a denial to a creditor with intent to delay or defracd, to be a "beginning to keep his or her house," under the statue. Our act however, adds to the word used by the English statue, the qualification " fo that he or the cannot be taken or ferved with process," which would feem to imply a necessity of shewing, that process had really been fued out, and attempted to be fer-

3d. The second point is one of the greatest consequence to com. merce. The decision of it will determine how far the fystem of Bankruptcy is to have a favorable operation on the interests of commerce. We accordingly find, that cases of a fimilar nature have engaged the | should be made to the Major General, at closest attention of the English bench, and we have fortunately the refult of their labours to guide us in our judgement. That a debtor being about to fail, should not have the liberty to distinguish between his creditors, to repay the friendly indorfer or furety, who may have refigned his all to ferve him, and ful fer the hard dealer whose extortions may have produced his ruin, to core in for the relidue of his property, that creditors of thefe del- | June 3. 1803.

criptions should be placed on a perfeet equality, feems at first to shock our ideas of equity and justice, and the want of reflection make us almost abhor the law which calls the satisfaction of the first debt, a fraudulent act.

But when we confider that the object of every fystem of infolvency is to prevent this diferetion in the debtor; that the connections, the partialities, the passions, and frequently the fraudulent views of the infolvent, will prevent his making that distribution of his effects which justice requires; we shall not arraign the law which takes the apportionment from his hands, and places it beyond the reach of his par-

The case cited by Cooke, 376, and Harman vs. Fisher, Cow. 117 turn on the transfe, being complete. before the act of bankruptcy committed.

Worsely us, de Mottore, 1 Bur 474, was decided on the fraudulent badges attending the transfer, it was of the bankrupt's property; and possession did not accompany the deed. But the case of Linton, vs. Bartlett, 10 Geo. MSS. 3 Wils. 47, cited by Cooke; 380, is completely analogous to the prefent; there the transfer was complete. Possession accompanied it, it was for only a small part of the bank. rupt's property: the vendee had no knowledge or fuspicion of the infolvency, and it was to fecure a fum advanced without interest, and by a brother from motives of friend. thip Yet because it was done in contemplation of Bankruptcy, voluntarily without threats or folicitation, and with a view of preferring one creditor to another, it was declared fraudulent and void. So in the present case, though the detendant is a fair; nay a meritorious creditor; yet as the Bankrupt, without preffure or threat of legal process, with the express purpose of giving a preference, delivered his goods on the eve of an act of bankruptcy, and to a greater value than the debt, it is clearly a fraud upon the operation of the law. which would be, and too frequently has been totally defeated by practices of this kind.

It the debtor can prefer one, he can prefer any number of creditors, to the whole extent of his capital, and the law would become nugatory. It is important, therefore to be known, that the courts will carry the law into operation, and if any ferious doubts are entertained against the judgement now given for the plantiff, it is recommended to the parties to change the case into a special verdict, that it may undergo the revision of a superior tri-
