CANZONET.

FROM THE PORTUGUESE OF LUIS DE CAMOENS.

By Lord Strangford.

FLOWERS are fresh, and bushes green,
Cheerily the linnets sing;
Winds are soft, and skies serene;

Time, however, soon shall throw
Winter's snow
O'er the buxom breast of Spring.

Hope that buds in Lover's heart,
Lives not through the scorn of years!
Time makes Love itself depart,

Time and scorn congeal the mind;
Looks unkind
Freeze Affection's warmest tears!

Time shall make the bushes green,
Time dissolve the winters snow,
Winds be soft and skies serene,

Linnets sing their wonted strain,
But again
Blighted Love shall never blow.

From the Enquirer.

THE deputation of Creeks which passed through Richmond, has been invited to the seat of government to hold a talk for re-organizing the treaty made last year, by which they have ceded to the United States that tract of land in the state of Georgia, which lies within the forks of the Oconee and Ocmulgee rivers.

The principal man of this deputation is the third chief in the nation. The Creeks have three of those head men, whom they call chiefs or speakers.

The Creeks have already made some advances in this career of improvement. Col. Hawkins, to whom too much praise cannot be given for his humanity and zeal, has now introduced among them the Plough, the Wheel and the Loom.

The Creeks have five men among them, who may be regarded as the historical and legal libraries of the tribe. It is their office to collect and transmit to successive generations their history, antiquities and laws.

year among the whole tribe. When the great council of the nation is in session, these learned traditionaries attend for the purpose of preserving their decisions.

The 3rd chief who is now with the deputation, under the name of Cornell, is represented by Col. Hawkins, as by far the most eloquent man in the Creek nation.

In one indispensable attribute of an orator, he appeared eminently skilled. He had none of those tremulous feelings of embarrassment, or a desire for applause, which generally call off the attention of the speaker from the subject to the spectator.

The subject of this harangue was indeed enough to kindle the eloquence of the untutored orator. He and his companions had just returned from a visit to the Capitol, the Armoury, the Canal, and he took that opportunity of expressing the feelings of his own mind, and of exciting theirs.

It is the opinion of Col. Hawkins, that the population of the Creek nation is every day becoming less under their ancient regime. The change in the manner of their living has contributed, he thinks, to arrest the depopulation of their country.

But this important revolution in their pursuits has not only contributed to increase their population, but what is still more desirable, the sensibility of their nature and the refinement of their manners.

MONICELLO.

In turning over the pages of Dr. Morse's "American Geography," in the description of Virginia, is the following particular.

The prospect is extensive and charming. Mr. Jefferson has more than 1,100 acres of cultivated land. In 1797 he had 320 acres of wheat, 100 of corn, 320 of clover, 320 of peas and potatoes, and 120 workmen.

"He has a soul, wide as the sea,
" Calm as the night, bright as the day,
" There do his vast ideas play—"
