COMMENTS,

On the Diplomatic Aberrations and Anti-American Doctrines of Timothy Pickens.

No. III.

Of all the weakness of man, the ambition of legislating seems to be the most intoxicating, and unfortunately the most common; hence those innumerable collections of contradictory, useless and arbitrary laws which encumber the archives of almost every country.

As an American deeply interested in the honor and dignity of the North American confederacy, even admitting our maritime dominion to be out of the question in the case now under consideration, my mind revolts at a doctrine evidently designed to criminalise our navy.

so between their sovereigns they salute, if not, as the French have fixed it prudently, they do not salute at all.

But how different is the case now in consideration; the Little Belt was cruising on our coasts, for the purpose of disturbing and intercepting our commerce and violating our dominion, in defiance of our sovereignty, of our treaties with England herself, and of our neutral system.

If the God of reason and peace has not forever deserted the British shores, we ought to obtain the most satisfactory reparation. But how can we expect it, when our own country breeds men capable, in such a crisis, to add domestic outrage to foreign insult, to call the avengers of our rights murderers, and to metamorphose the first spontaneous act of a dignified neutrality, on the part of the U. States, into a projected war.

It does not belong to my subject to investigate the ideas of Mr. Pickens, on that projected war, since the limits which I have prescribed to my comments are those of diplomatic enquiries on the law of nations, relative to the case of the Little Belt, and to neutral rights.

DEVOTION TO FRANCE.

Our administration is roundly asserted by the federal party to be devoted to France, and ready to sacrifice the interest and honor of the country to the will of the Emperor of the French.

Let them look at the treaty made with Mr. Erskine—the proclamation of the President, which followed opening our ports to England, and closing them to France. Let them read over the refusal of ratifying that treaty.

was no predilection in favor of France: Second, That there was a strong one in favor of England: And thirdly, That there was no love or regard for this country—that all sense of honor had become extinct, and submission was its grave.

Is the refusal to submit or conform to the will of the British Ministry, a proof of our administration being disposed to admit France to regulate our commerce with other countries? I say no, it is not; and the world is convinced we have rejected and remonstrated in the strongest terms against every decree of France that interfered with regard to our commerce with England or any other country.

Things have changed and France accepts the terms which England rejected; the conditions are the same, and this British party, who exulted at seeing the French commerce excluded from our ports—are now in arms to force the government to violate their engagements with France, and for repealing the law interdicting British merchandise into our ports.

Altho' an act of justice on their part, in ceasing to interrupt our commerce with other nations would open our ports to all their manufactures and their shipping—yet this course does not meet the wishes of the British ministers nor their partizans here—they for that reason cry out against the administration, accuse them of the embarrassment our commerce labors under, and call on them to break faith with France, lay aside our neutral character, and enlist under the standard of Great Britain.

State Bank of North-Carolina.

RALEIGH, August 19, 1811. THE State Bank of North-Carolina having been this day put into operation, the Stockholders of the said Bank are hereby required to pay the second instalment on the several shares which they may hold therein, in Gold or Silver, to the Cashier of the Principal Bank, or to the Cashier of such of the Branch Banks as they originally subscribed to, on or before the 18th day of October next.

Cape-Fear Lottery—Class III.

Table with columns for Prize amounts and ticket counts. Includes 'SCHEME' and 'STATIONARY PRIZES' sections.

The drawing will commence in Raleigh, on the 3d Monday of November next, and will be finished before the rise of the Assembly. The improvement of the navigation has commenced, and I flatter myself that in 12 months from this date, it will be the greatest improvement ever made in North-Carolina.

NEW FIRM.

THE Subscriber having taken his Young Man, ROBERT HARRISON, into Co partnership, the Business will in future be conducted under the Firm of Glendinning & Harrison. Their Stock of GOODS is large, and they expect to receive in a short time a further supply which will render their Assortment very complete; and which they will sell low for Cash, or on a short Credit to punctual Customers.

W. C. returning his sincere thanks to his Friends and former Customers, for past favors, and solicits a continuance of their custom. As my own business is now closed, it becomes necessary that a general settlement should be made—it is therefore earnestly desired, that those having open accounts with me would come forward as soon as possible, and make payment either by Cash or note, as many of them have been a considerable time due.
