Ourare the plans of fair, delightful Peace, Unwarped by party rage, to live like Brothers."

ENGLAND.

FROM THE BOSTON CHRONICLE AND PATRIOT. Fourth Letter on the present state of England.

THE REFORMERS.

Mr. Southey, in his late letter to William Smith, member of Parliament for Norwich, has the following remarks:

Slavery has long ceased to be tolerated in Europe; the remains of feudal oppression are disappearing even in those countries which have improved the least...

It is well known that the Poet Laureat is at present one of the most determined enemies of reform in any shape, much more revolution.

Wealth we know naturally draws into its vortex, talents and education.—The supply follows the demand, and the articles must be accommodated to the taste of the customer.

In general, however, a few may be found ready to sacrifice personal interest to what they think a duty. But in England at the present day, the preponderance of wealth is so great on the Aristocratic side, as to monopolize completely all the cultivated talents.

pions. Sir Francis Burdett and Lord Cochrane are the only two voices that undoubted right, a brilliant cause and a starving people have yet been able or are soon likely to command.

While I was in England I attended one of these public meetings, which was held, I think, about the last of January, just after the commencement of the present session of Parliament.

The substance of all these speeches was nearly the same. They traced the miseries of the country to the present political system, or, as they phrase it, "the borough-mongering system"

Of late the orthodoxy of Sir Francis Burdett himself, in the cause of thorough reform, seems to be a little drawn in question. The truth is, he is attached by his fortune and rank to the Aristocracy, and begins perhaps to apprehend a little the effect that the full success of the party he had hitherto supported might have upon his own interest.

received, as is well known, from the famous Horne Tooke, and if he could have inherited his talents with them, would have been a most formidable champion in the popular cause.

Mr. Brougham may be mentioned not precisely among the leaders of the popular party, but among those who would gladly have been so, could it have been conveniently brought about; as it is he inveighs against them in Parliament more violently than any other member.

Counsellor Phillips may be numbered among the friends of thorough reform, and notwithstanding the very faulty character of his eloquence at present, will probably in time be a powerful man, and a truly great orator.

vigorous mind, and most of the ingredients necessary for eloquence of the first order. There has been hitherto a very considerable defect in taste, of a kind, however, likely to be remedied as he grows older.

Universal suffrage and annual Parliaments are at present the watch word of the reformers, and some discussion has been wasted in England upon the question whether these are really privileges guaranteed by the English constitution in its purity.

The violent measures lately adopted by the government, have put a stop for the time to a public efforts of this party—but, as the Laureat well observes, the disease is not healed.

What his opinions now are, those can tell who have waded through his pious pilgrimage to Waterloo, his Laureat Odes, and his late letter to Mr. Smith, the coarseness of which, in point of language, is its only pretension to strength; in which he is vastly angry, but so far from confuting his adversary's charge, that he does not appear to understand it.

At a Court held for the County of Warren in the month of May last, the subscribers qualified as Executors of the last Will and Testament of WILLIAM TWITTY, dec.
