MORNING.

"Twas morn—and from the East the Sun had shed His glowing beams, and ting'd the mountains red: The dancing mists in swift succession flew, Chas'd by the early breeze that softly blew, Along the swelling hills—the yellow beam, Smil'd on the forest, sparkler on the stream, And gaily laughing at the conquer'd night, Display'd on every spire the grateful light, The perky drops, that bent the blooming thorn, Started from slumber with the opening morn, And from the green leaves droppings, spread around Delightful fragrance on the daisied ground; Whiteout, responsive to the woodman's stroke The clear-ton'd echoes of the hills awoke— The cheerful lark, high mounting, hail'd the day, And carol'd in mid air his matin lay; Seeking his scatter'd flocks, and whistling loud, The sturdy shepherd call'd his bleating crowd; With frequent pause he stopp'd—and gazing high Admird the orient beauties of the sky; And, steadfast viewing, breath'd the silent pray'— When all his toils were past 't inhabit there."

Observations respecting the Comets of the Solar System.

Having in a previous communication endeavored to explain some of the properties of that active matter which gives motion and law to the creation. In examining these properties and laws, we cannot but be astonished with the irregularity of the Comets; for they evidently appear to violate all law and order, both in their motion as to velocity, and the direction of that velocity. The law of the system, as discovered by Kepler and demonstrated by Sir Isaac Newton, as to distance and periodical revolutions "is that the squares of their periods is universally as the cubes of their distance." Therefore, from the direction and different direction of their courses, from the accelerated velocity with which they appear to move. If these bodies are indeed planets, they must be under some new and contradictory agent in nature to that which revolves the other planets. Those remarks, with the evident failure of ancient predictions respecting their return, to me is conclusive, though we have some other collateral testimony that these bodies are perishable, from the density of their tails, and from the effect which the appearance of those bodies uniformly has had upon the transmissible matter of the earth's atmosphere. Having made this opposition to ancient and worthy philosophers, & their real worth, gives me greater confidence that those bodies are perishable, and by no means planets. For the true discovery of a planetary law, gives us great reason to doubt about the nature of comets—but perhaps it may be easier to destroy than to build up. My conjecture is, that the Comets are no other than larger meteors—for, if the solar system is connected with a great centre, by the same contrivance which attaches the planets to the sun, the system is surrounded by a dense region; from which region far beyond the most remote planet, we conjecture, these comets are generated, & visit the atmosphere of the system as the shooting stars visit the atmosphere of the earth; both are similar in appearance, &c. and perhaps are designed to answer the same ends in creation, to replenish the system with more transmissible matter, which is indurated by heat and by the animal and vegetable organization. This dense region investing the solar system, has likely a zone of greater cohesion and attraction, which may have also effect in elevating and depressing the planets in their orbits. This elevation in all the planets happen nearly at the same points in the heavens. Cancer, & Capricorn, perhaps Mars, in neighboring signs, and high up in the same Gemini and Sagittarius. As if the common zone of the system passed through those points—the duration and depression produces the seasons of the year.

PROPOSALS

By JACOB GIBSON, JR. PRINTER, of the City of Washington. For Publishing, by Subscription, a new Edition of the "FEDERALIST."

On the new Constitution & Proclamation of Neutrality, written in the Years 1788 and 1793, under the signatures of FARRINGTON and PACIFICUS; by Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, and John Jay, Esq's. TO WHICH WILL BE ADDED, The Constitution of the United States, And the different Amendments which have been made to it since its adoption, to the close of the year 1817.

THE merit of this Work must be known to every Politician and Statesman in the United States. Written by men of high standing, extensive learning, and acknowledged talents, and embracing subjects of the deepest political interest, it cannot but be valuable to every American who admires and loves the Government, under which it is his happy duty to live. To foreigners, the "Federalist" is equally important, as it enables them more perfectly to comprehend the nature and principles of the American Constitution, which is the wonder of the world, and will be the admiration of posterity. In addition to the importance of the matters discussed, the style in which the various numbers of the "Federalist" are written, is almost of itself a sufficient recommendation to obtain for it a place in every gentleman's library. From these considerations, and the present scarcity of the work, the publisher has been induced to undertake the publication of a new edition of this valuable production; & he proposes to discharge that undertaking, in a manner that he doubts not, will be entirely satisfactory to the public. Having been furnished with the names of the writers of the different numbers from a source which cannot be questioned, he will attach the author's name to each number, that the reader may know, without difficulty, by who it was written. It will be put to press about the middle of April next, and be ready for delivery in November following.

THE IMPORTED HORSE, EAGLE: The finest Horse that ever was seen, and the speediest horse at New-Market, as even in England, since the day of Chlothe.

The above was bred in London, 1st Aug. 1810, by Thomas H. Moreland. EAGLE will stand the ensuing Season at the Red-House, in Caswell-Grove, N. C. Eagle's Colts were brought on the 1st last fall, and were uncommonly successful; and there is no doubt but they will continue to be successful.
