POETRY.

PRON THE LONDON COURIER. THE BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE. Who fell at the Battle of Cerunna, in Spain, fn 1808.

Not a drum was heard, nor a funeral note, As his corse to the rampart we hurried, Not a soldier discharged his farewell shot. O'er the grave, where our hero we buried

We buried him darkly at dead of night, The sods with our bayonets turning, By the struggling moon beam's misty light, And the lantern dimly burning.

No useless coffin enclosed his breast, Not in sheet nor in shroud we bound him, But he lay like a warrior taking his rest, With his martial cloak around him.

Few and short were the pravers we said, And we spoke not a word of sorrow, But we steadfartly gazed on the face of the depd.

And we bitterly thought of the morrow.

We thought, as we hallowed his narrow bed

And smoothed down his lonely pillow, That the foe and the stranger would tread o'er his head,

And we far away on the billow.

Lightly they'll talk of the spirit that's gone And o'er his cold ashes upbraid him. But nothing he'll reek if they let tim sleep

In the grave where a Briton has laid him.

But half of our heavy task was done, When the clock toll'd the hour for retire

And we heard the distant random gun That the foe was suddenly firing.

Slowly and sadly we laid him down, From the field of his fame fresh and gory, We carv'd not a line, we rais'd not a stone, But we left him alone with his glory.

----CONJUGAL FRIENDSHIP. Celestial happiness ! when'er she stops

To visit earth, one shrine the goddess finds, And one alone to make her sweet amends For absent heaven-the bosom of a friend.

Royal favorites are often obliged to carry their complaisance further than they meant. They live for their maser's pleasure, and they die for his convenience.

The father of the British Lord A. bingdon, who was remarkable for the stateliness of his manners, one day riding through a village in the vicinitv of Oxford, met a lad dragging a calf along the road, who, when his Lordship came up to him, made a stop, Lordship asked the boy if he knew him. He replied, "Ees," "What is my name?" said his lordship. " Why, lard Abingdon," replied the lad. Then, why don't you take off your hat ?" So I will, sur," said the boy, " if ye'll hold the calf."

or even threaten the loss of them-he may seek in vain a remedy from these parasites of his prosperity-instead of the proffers of affection and frienfiship. he meets with nothing but scorp and repulsive coolness.

Disappointed, disheartened, &cher ly distracted, he returns home. Then dreadful indeed is his lot, if he finds there no consolations from the fond endearments of a wife. Hone is lost. In sad sullenness he retires to his apartment-alternately blaming himself and cursing his deceivers-and finally seeks to drown reflection in the poisonous glass. But oh ! how different is the case of that man who is met by the smiles of her, who in glowing youth, while he held her trembling hand, with blushing cheeks and quivering lips, vowed she would love and bonor him as the partner of her earthly happiness. She rushes into his arms-and half the agony of his soul is lost in this embrace of conjugal affection. In youth when he met the love-kindling glances of her soft blue eves, he thought her beautiful-when he led her blushing to the altar, his happiness seemed complete, gathered round the social fireside, he sees her dispensing the bounties of hospitality, and the affections of a mother-then he knows she is dear to him. But now, in the transports of love he exclaims, " Oh ! woman, best of heaven's blessings, thou art man's guardian angel while on earth !"

To desire little, makes poverty equal with riches. He who wants not rich, nor he who wants not, poor .---Riches are not measured by their use -we cannot call large possessions riches, only so far as they are conducive to comfort.

There is this difference between happiness and wisdom; he that thinks himself the happiest man really is so; but he that thinks himself the wisest, is generally the greatest fool.

Sympathy, in some temperaments, will produce the same conduct, with insensibility, in others, and the effects will be similar, although the causes that produce them will be opposite .--The famous amateur Anglaise, who crossed the channel to witness in execution at Paris, was never suspected
