THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1829.

NO. 1361.

Augusta, (Geo.) June 11.

The Locusts, which are numerous in the swamp and the oak woods in this vicinity, are destroying the leaves of the fruit and forest trees in some parts of the country. They have not yet attacked the growing crop. They are so numerous in the swamps below this city, that a respectable planter told us the other day that his hogs were getting fat on them. They are small, but little larger than the large horse-fly, and make a noise like the tree frog.

Mr. Hall, whose horses plunged into the well on the Columbia road not long since, met with a similar accident the other day. A horse from his livery stable fell into a well in the country, and was extricated alive from his perilous situation, though the well was said to be deep, by the humanity and intrepidity of Mr. Robert McKeen, who, in vain offering ten dollars to any person who would descend and fasten the chains he had collected round the horse, bravely descended into the well himself by a plough-line, where the horse was struggling in his uneasy position and secured the object of his solicitude in such a manner that he was drawn up, and is likely to recover.

We think Mr. Hall's horses want water.

Shameful.—A few days ago, as one of the steam-boats came to the wharf at Bordentown, N. J. a very respectable dressed female asked a poor woman, who stood by, to hold her infant a few minutes, while she went around the town to look for lodgings. The woman so requested took the child; but she waited in vain for the return of its unfeeling mother. She had abandoned it at the tender age of three weeks, to the questionable mercy of a stranger! The woman with whom the child is left, is named Grant; she resides at Burlington and is poorly able to maintain it, having a house full of her own children already. She brought the little disowned one with her, and intends taking care of it as her own. How striking the contrast between such benevolence, and the deliberate casting off of the helpless innocent by her to whom alone it ought to look for nourishment and affection.

More of civilization.—A fur merchant of this city, informs us that the western Indians are becoming quite adepts in the art of cheating. One of their means of increasing their gains, is by running lead under their beaver skins. The price of beaver is from 50 to 100 cents an ounce, and a cunning Missouri Indian sometimes contrives to sell lead at the same price.

To show the value attached to horses of high blood and reputation, we subjoin the following extract of a letter from the owner of the celebrated horse Sir Archy:

"Sir Archy will be in market next July, (1815) and in consideration of his being no doubt the most fashionable, and perhaps the best running horse in the United States, I should not think of taking less than eight thousand dollars for him." Signed, John D. Amis, son of Wm. proprietor of Sir Archy.

A one year old Colt by Rattler, a descendant of the above, and owned by Mr. Harness, near Moorfield, Virginia, is estimated by him at one thousand dollars.

Nat. Int.

The year 1829 has been fruitful in interesting events. In this year Gen. Jackson became President of the U. States—the Catholic Emancipation bill passed both Houses of Parliament—one of the most splendid and ancient Cathedrals in Europe was burned—a most destructive earthquake occurred in Spain—and one of the most awful accidents has lately happened in this country. Greater events will, we venture to predict, be developed before this year has run its course.—Alex. Gaz.

Monreal, June 9.

Wonderful sagacity of a Dog.—A few days ago, as the child of Mr. John Rot, merchant of this city, was leaning over the banisters of the stairs, in the upper part of the house, he lost his balance, tumbled over, and in the act of falling down a considerable height, was fortunate enough to lay hold of a rail, by means of which he was upheld, suspended in a manner in the air. A dog belonging to the same gentleman seeing the danger the child was in, sprang instantaneously to his relief, and extending himself over the banisters, from the stairs above, laid hold of him in his dangerous and alarming situation, and raising up, drew him back over the banisters, depositing him on the stairs in safety. Instances of the wisdom and benevolence of this excellent animal in preserving human life are numerous; and to the credit of the species are frequently recorded. We witnessed an instance ourselves of a child, preserved in a similar way, from drowning in the river Liffey; the infant sprang out of the nurse's arms, off the parapet, and would have perished, but for the dog of a gentleman accidentally passing, which plunging in saved him. The father of the child, a wealthy merchant, offered 300l. for the animal, but could not prevail on the owner to part with him.

Sir Walter Scott's Dog, CAMP.—I am indebted to Sir Walter Scott for the following anecdote:

"The wisest dog I ever had, was what is called the bull-dog terrier. I taught him to understand a great many words, inasmuch that I am positive that the communication betwixt the canine species and ourselves might be greatly enlarged.—Camp once bit the baker, who was bringing bread to the family, I beat him and explained the enormity of his offence, after which, to the last moment of his life, he never heard the least allusion to the story in whatever voice or tone it was mentioned, without getting up and retiring into the darkest corner of the room, with great appearance of distress. Then if you said, 'The Baker was well paid,' or 'The baker was not hurt after all,' Camp came forth from his hiding place, capered, and barked, and rejoined. When he was unable, towards the end of his life, to attend me when on horseback, he used to watch for my return, and the servant used to tell him 'his master was coming down the hill, or thro' the moor;' and although he did not use any gesture to explain his meaning, Camp was never known to mistake him, but either went out at the front to go up the hill, or at the back to get down by the moor-side."

How to be rich.—Nothing is more easy than to grow rich. It is only to trust nobody—to befriend none—to get every thing, and save all we get—to stint ourselves, and every body belonging to us—to be the friend of no man, and have no man for our friend—to heap interest upon interest, cent upon cent—to be mean, miserable and despised, for some twenty or thirty years—and riches will come as sure as disease and disappointment.

I once had a constant and troublesome visitor, whom I tried many ways to disoblige. First, I essayed smoke, which he bore like a badger; then fire, which he bore like a salamander. At last, I lent him five dollars, and have not seen him since.—Anon.

For the Raleigh Register.

Mr. Printers.—Down our way, we couldn't get nobody to preach no Oration upon the 4th of July, this present; so our Irish schoolmaster were axed by the committee to compose a Song; which he did; and I now send it to you, for to put it out into print, in your newspaper, for the comfort of your Readers. It did't take him only a fortnight to make. It's middling warm for the Ginnal; but our folks would't sing it—only think!—because it goes, it goes to the tune of Adams and Liberty. But our schoolmaster, waxing mad on the spot, went and got right up on a stump, just as the people got together, and sung it all alone by himself, in spite of 'em; and you never heard any thing go equal to it. He are considered, down our way a right smart songster man, for all his brogue. Hope you'll think so too.

Uncle Ben has got back from Washington city, and ha'n't got no office! He is mighty down in the mouth, I tell ye; but we cheer him up as well as we can. He says, Dog his cat if ever he was so shabby treated before, in all his travels. Now-a-days, he a'n't so hot for the Ginnal as he was—nor isn't nobody in these parts.

Yours, to serve,
NICHOLAS NIMCHI.

SONG FOR THE 4TH OF JULY.

Should we let the BIRTHDAY of our glorious nation
Go by without song—'twere a sin and a shame!
By the powers, though unfit for the Bard's lofty station,
I'll e'en lend a hand to make feet, though but lame;
What! a fourth of July,
Without tillery—?
And Jackson our President?—I'nt it I
That will see the occasion be hanged ere it passes,
Without a plenty of music, and full mantling glasses.

When the British, at Orleans, attack'd us in ditches,
From Jackson they ran, as Old Nick had been there;
And the Indians fled from him rapidly—which is
The very best thing they could do, I declare;
Whenever He is nigh,
There must somebody fly;
Like a blood-hound is he, and must chase or must lie;
If he once gets a scent, no fox is more cunning—
And see the poor POSTMASTERS, how they are running!

I mean not to sing, on this great anniversary
All the illustrious deeds the bold CHIEFTAIN has done;
Who'er takes a glance at his Life, though but cursory,
Will be stuck with amazement at its general run;
The very same hour
That he ran into power,
Fell tilt started he, the whole country
to scour,
And the like was ne'er seen of appointing, displacing,
Such "a deli. of a scatterment," dodging and ranging!

Then haul, on this glorious day, to the Hero!
And hail to his CABINET, knowing & staunch;
Let his foes—the SPEAKERS!—who'd compare him to Nero,
Beware of the vengeance of EATON & BRANCH;
Since the log—King is dead,
We've another instead
And well should we guard both the heel
& the head,
For the measures of Government aye shall be bold,
While VAN BUREN holds goose quills, and INGRAM the gold.

Let the ADAMS MEN boast and rise high as a steepie,
Our party is safe and untroubled by fears;
For, in spite of their wants, and the wants of the PEOPLE,
The Hero sits firm on his THROSE—for four years:
Then, on Clay and his friends
If good fortune attends,
We J. ecksonians will have answered our ends,
To kick up a dust, and to spread devastation,
Through all parts of this happy and glorious nation.
Now fill up your glasses, brave lads, and make merry,
Such times as these times we may ne'er see again;
Are we not independent? Aye, that we are,
very,
And the devil a man has a right to complain—
Then huzza for JACKSON,
And down with the faction,
That causes, in wisest of councils, distraction!
May the friends of the Chieftain in office still be,
Whilst his foes, root and branch hate the HICKO-RY TREE!

MARRIED.

J. Millikin, to Miss Antoinette E. Norfleete.

DIED.

In Mecklenburg county, Virginia, on the 19th ultimo, Mrs. Ann Daniel, consort of James Daniel, Esq. Perhaps all who lose a friend, think that friend among the best and dearest who ever died. When to this natural feeling of every heart can be added undoubted testimony of excellent traits of character, yielded not only by the sympathy of suffering heirs, but also by the tears of the church; and the deepest sorrow of all who intimately knew the departed, it must be acknowledged, that it is not to be attributed to the partiality of friendship, when Mrs. Daniel is pronounced to have been one of those few mortals whose praise exceeds all words. She was an humble christian—a dux as well as a heaven of the word. The last act of her life was, that of benevolence—clothing the poor and needy,
"in the name of a disciple." Her last act was only a fair specimen of her whole life. Her husband—step children—servants—friends—the church—the world, always found in her all that affection, tenderness, faithfulness, politeness, devotedness and benevolence, which her saviour taught—and amidst the duties and trials of life, her walk and conversation was in heaven.—
Her death was sudden, and her disease deprived her of the power of utterance. But we have great hope in her death, because her life was that of the righteous.—Communicated.
