RALEIGH REGISTER AND NORTH-CAROLINA GAZETTE.

But, sir, I would inquire who, in voting for the usual appropriation of the last year, imagined he was giving an extra fund to be employed in this or any other extraordinary way, and to the fitness or propriety of which his attention was in no way directed ? The money might have been granted, but I insist that it could only the direct request, and asking a specific thereby affording the representatives of the People the important privilege of looking into and discussing, in advance of legislation, all the questions of expediency, of principle, or of national policy, that this or any other unusual disbursement may be supposed to involve; and not leaving to them the almost useless task of merely criticising the expenditure, after it shall have been made from a fund created without any intimation from any quarter of an intention to apply it to such a purpose. When an event occurs that is really contingent and urgent in its character, such as could not have been especially looked to and provided for by Congress, then the President would be clearly justified in meeting any expense that be requested to attend said Convention, as delmay accrue, out of the common standing | egates from this county. contingent appropriations ; but it cannot be said that the determination to institute negotiations with the Emperor of Japan, the Sultan of Muscat, or King of Siam, or to apply for a renewal of the treaty with the Emperor of Morocco, partakes at all of this character; these were objects presenting time for deliberation, and were certainly of sufficient importance, even from the large expenditure to which they have given rise, to have been presented directly to the consideration of Congress. But, sir, the principle for which I contend is sustained by the previous example of our Government, in relation to this very treaty with Morocco : for when, in 1791, it was proposed to make pres- and that the Edenton Gazette and Ral ents to the then new Emperor, in order to eigh Register be requested to publish the obtain his recognition of the treaty which same. it is now intended to renew, the money was not taken by the President from the contingent fund, or ordinary appropriation for intercourse with that Power, but a specific appropriation was made in a law passed for that particular purpose. This is an example, sir, worthy of all imitation, and which I sincerely wish had been followed in the instances to which I am now adverting. But, instead of this safe and truly republican doctrine of specific appropriations gaining favor at this day, I can but perceive the manifestation of a disposition to lose sight of this powerful safeguard against an improvident and unauthorized expenditure of the treasure of the nation. Say, if you please, that all is yet well, and that we have, at present, a sufficient security for the faithful application of the public money, not in the cautious specific provisions of our laws appropriating it, but in the sound and prudent discretion of those to whom we entrust it : Would it, I ask, be wise to rely upon the continuance of such a security ? Yes, sir, all may now be well, and yet that assurance should not induce us, as legislators, to look the less anxiously to the means of future safety. Those may hereafter possess the Executive rule in our Government, whose ambitious propensities, or whose sordid love of money, may lead them to construe not only liberally, but most mischievously, their power over such portions of the public treasure as may be placed in their hands, without strict legal limitations as to the objects of its application ; let us not, therefore, set an example of blind and implicit confidence, which may tend hereafter to endanger or destroy the liberties of our country.
