the militia system, which would be tantamount to placing a standing military force of 200,000 men at the disposal, it cannot be doubted that our Republican institutions are, at this moment, struggling in the very crisis of their destiny, and that, if the power which now wars against them shall triumph in the existing contest for the Presidency, it will be rendered by the victors too strong even to be afterwards successfully resisted by the People.

It is well known throughout the North and the South that Mr. Van Buren has been from the beginning of his administration, feeling for the South, and has relied confidently upon the support of that section of the Union, upon the ground assumed by his friends here, that he is "a Northern man with Southern principles!"
