

If Buggies were Stript of their Paint

PAINT has its uses, also its abuses. It protects—beautifies—preserves. But it also disguises—masks—conceals. You cannot tell the grade of the wood used in the buggy you buy after the paint is put on. Crack! Crash! Bang! Some unexpected break is your first warning of inferior materials. If you could strip some buggies of their paint you would see why they can be sold cheaply. The reason why would be immediately apparent. The cause of breaks—of short lived buggies would be disclosed.

If High Point buggies were stript of their paint you would see nothing but blemsless yellow poplar for body and seat and straight grained hickory—white—smooth—tough—well nigh unbreakable, in wheels, shafts and gear.

It would sow the seeds of discontent in your mind, as far as cheap buggies covered with glossy paint, are concerned. Forever afterwards, you would have none but a High Point Buggy. Then you would understand why they outlast ordinary buggies.

Write us for our interesting booklet on buggy construction and send the name of a reliable dealer in your locality.
