The bride's maids were charmments to the tariff bill. ing in full evening dress, each carrying a bouquet of bridal roses, and the gallant groomsmen looked well in their conventional black suits. When the whole party had entered and taken their places at the altar, the soothing voice of our beloved Dr. Dixon, in his distinct reading of the marriage ceremony, was accompanied by the low sweet strains of music, until the words, "I pronounce you man and wife," gave the happily wedded couple liberty to retire to the asylum parlor for the congratulations of friends. After a few moments spent thus pleasantly the bride and groom with their attendants, ushers and a few friends repaired to the home of the groom where the remainder of the evening was spent in pleasant intercourse one with another. During the evening we were invited into the dining room where the table groaned under the burden of the many good things; flowers and fruits were tastefully arranged to please the sight as well as the appetite.

The Promise of Business.

There is a moderate calm in trade just now, as we are in the betwixt and between period of the business season ; but it is remarkable how the judicious energy of our business men is rapidly increasing the dull season trade.

The man who stops advertising in what is called the dull seasons, gives up the contest and transfers his trade to his more wise competitor, and he advertises only when business is most easily commanded, while the man who invites the public to very strong and conservative appeal was trade every day by wisely presenting what will most attract patronage, is practically without dull seasons.

The promise of business this fall is grat the compromise were adopted with but ifying, and it is now evident that there will be plenty of trade for all who know how to command it. It won't hunt busi ness houses, but the business house that knows how to invite custom and how to hold it when it comes, will have abundant prosperity.

Business has become severely practical, and it is practical at both ends of the line. It must be practical in selling as it is in buying and the widely read newspaper is the only channel through which trade
