Cozart his wife, and duly registered in mortgage book 17, page 369, in the office of the Register of Deeds of Granville county, default having been made in payment of the debt secured thereby, and by request of Joseph B. Parham, the holder of the bond secured thereby, I shall sell for cash, by public auction to the highest bidder, at the court house door in Oxford, Granville county, N. C., on the 6th day of November, 1893, the real estate described and conveyed in said Deed of Trust, to-wit: Nine acres of land in the town of Oxford, bought by the said B. H. Cozart of John Johnson, adjoining the new cemetery or grave yard and Lawson Wright's residence lot, and the extension of Hillsboro street, known as the brick yard tract. The trustee will also sell the interest conveyed to him in the land upon which the Oxford & Clarksville R. R. bed is laid, said road runs across said land. GEO. B. HARRIS,

What She Wanted Them For.
Susie's mother sent her to Warren's the other day for some shoe strings. The little girl tipped the door latch and slowly walked up to the proprietor.

"Mamma sent me down for a pair of shoe strings," and Susie fingered her pennies nervously as she looked into the dealer's face. Warren turned to a bunch of strings upon the wall and began to pull a couple out. Then he stopped.

"How long does she want them?" Susie looked flustered. "I don't know, but I think she wants them to keep."—Boston Transcript.

Willing, But Not Anxious.

Ministers often times observe curious phases of human nature among persons soliciting their services in the performance of a marriage ceremony. "Will you take this woman for your wedded wife?" asked Rev. Madison C. Peters of a would-be bridegroom recently.

"Yes, I'll take her," remarked the man in a half dejected tone, "but," he added, with surprising frankness, "I'd rather it were her sister."—N. Y. Herald.

Out of Order.

"As I was saying," said old Mr. Skinphint of the Story-Tellers' club, "as I was saying, he then borrowed ten dollars of me—"

"Gentlemen," interrupted the president of the club, rising to his feet, "I must rule the gentleman out of order. One of the first by-laws of this club is that only stories which bear evidences of reasonable probability shall be recounted here."—Chicago Record.

Explained.

"In addition to your physician's fee you put in a charge here for mileage," said the lawyer who was settling up the affairs of the deceased.

"Yes, sir," said the doctor.

"What is the mileage for?"

"The deceased occupied a room on the top floor of a Chicago hotel when I paid my professional visits to him."—N. Y. Press.

A Suggestion.

"How do you pay these rammers?" asked a wayfarer of a paving contractor.

"By the day," said the contractor.

"You ought to pay them by the pound," said the wayfarer. "Then they'd pound oftener."—Jury.

He Wanted to Know.

"Now, remember," said the school-teacher, "a contagious disease is one you can catch."

"Is a spanking a disease?" asked Benny Bloobumper.

"No; how ridiculous!"

"Well, I often catch one."—Truth.

A Victim of Habit.

Ellen—Habits are hard things to break.

Maud—Yes, indeed, there's Minnie Sereleaf, who formed the habit of being twenty-two some years ago and has never broken it yet.—Chicago Record.

A Few Drawbacks.

Aunt—And how does my little pet like going to school?

Little Pet—I like it ever so much 'cept the readin', writin' and 'rithmetic an' spellin'.—Good News.

Safe from Fortune Hunters.

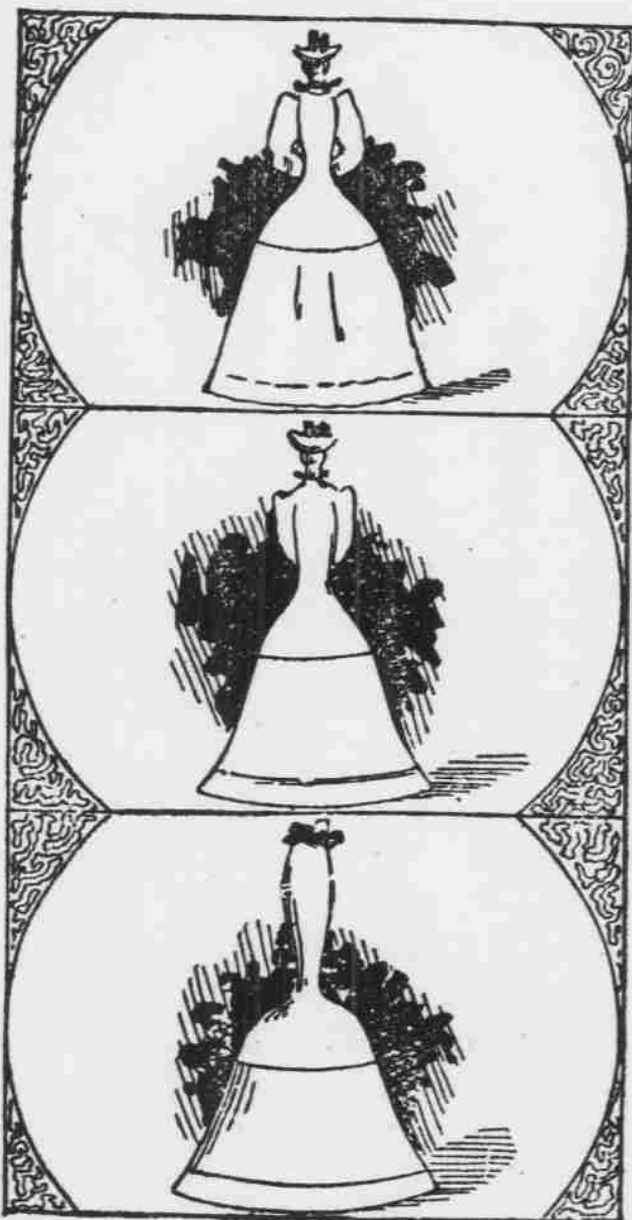

Prima—Of one thing I am sure. No man will ever marry me for my fortune.

Secunda—No. In your case your face is your fortune.—Judge.

He Knew.

"Women have no minds," said lordly Jack, "Whatever the world may say."
"I am sure they have," growled Arthur back, "And they change them every day."—Puck.

EVOLUTION OF THE BELL.

—Chicago Mail.

Tough Underpinning.
Minks—Lame again, I see?
Winks—Yes, my feet are very tender, and shoes always hurt.

Minks—Mine are tough—tough as pine-knots. Why, I can even wear shoes that are made to measure.—N. Y. Weekly.
