RAILROAD WAR.

The R. & D. Attempts to Dispossess the D. & N. at Durham—Lively Fight.

The railroad war of a year ago was renewed at Durham yesterday, and there was great excitement among the people. Durham claims jurisdiction over Peabody street, on which the greater portion of the disputed right of way lays, and refuses to allow the D. & N. track on that street to be torn up until a case involving its claims to the street is heard and decided at next term of Chatham court. We get the following account of yesterday's troubles from the Globe:

This morning a force of the O. & C. hands were put to tearing up the D. & N. track, and Mr. Wilson, the section master, Mr. Lipps, the civil engineer and master of maintenance of way, and two colored men were arrested. They were carried before Mayor Christian, and Messrs. Wilson and Lipps were discharged and the two colored men were bound over to appear Friday at 10 o'clock. It was agreed on all sides that the track should not be disturbed anywhere on Peabody street. This left a space lying between said street and the R. & D. R. R. of 346 feet on one rail, and 123 feet on the other, beginning at the first cross tie at the western end of the coal shoot. The force then went to tear up the track occupying this space, but found it filled with D. & N. freight cars with heavy brakes on. Thus the D. & N. held possession. The forces then proceeded to move the track of the O. & C. R. R. so as to connect it with the track of the D. & N. at a point on the disputed portion of the track. At this juncture the town authorities caused a portion of the D. & N. track to be torn up where it intersected Peabody street, and planted a huge upright timber in the middle of the right of way. This seemed to say "thus far shalt thou go and no further."

Then it was surmised that the D. & N. would run a line from some place beyond the disputed eastern point down Peabody street and connect with the road where it will all be within the street limit, leaving out the electric light house. Just here Mr. W. L. Moring, one of the force of the O. & C. road, under the direction of the attorney for the O. & C., attempted to cut down the upright timber that the town authorities had placed on the track, and he was promptly arrested. This put the matter in a shape to be heard on habeas corpus proceedings, and this no doubt will be done. Application will be made to some judge in Raleigh, it is thought, and the legality of the arrest, and the question whether the O. & C. has the right to tear up the track on Peabody street, will be determined.

The Person Moonshiners Commit Another Bold Outrage.

A Roxboro correspondent of the Raleigh Chronicle, under date of April 21, writes: This morning, before day, the store of J. D. Jones, of Hurdle's Mills, Person county, was forcibly entered by a party of disguised men. They were after a still worm, supposed to be worth about $25, which had been deposited with Mr. Jones a few days before for safe keeping by the revenue officers. They were fully armed and were sufficient to overcome Mr. Parrot, a young man who was sleeping in the store. They seized the worm and made their way off through the darkness amid a volley of shots exchanged between Parrot and the moonshiners.
