COMBINED ROOSTS AND NESTS

Arranged With Particular Idea of Pleasing Hens—Easily Removed When Cleaning Is Desired.

(By MYRON C. SAFFORD, in the Farm and Fireside.)

I think I have studied out and made a perfect combined nesting and roosting box. The nesting-boxes are of easy access, and at the same time so secret as to please the hens, and make them very secure from the hens learning that pernicious habit, so often learned in the winter, of eating their eggs. The roosts are in a position to allow all possible access of fresh air without draft, and at the same time allow protection from a severe cold night. The third important advantage lies in the fact that it is made so much in sections as to be moved with ease. Every part is perfectly accessible, so as to be easily oiled or whitewashed, to prevent and remove disease or lice. The foundation is a bench (A) 15 inches high, which allows the hens to use the floor space underneath, so that is not wasted; 25 inches wide, and as long as desired, conforming to the space available and fowls to use it; remember, the nests (E) should be 15 inches square, so the length should be an equal multiple of 15. The nesting-boxes should have a door (B) to turn down in front, with sufficient open space in cracks to allow the hen a little light, and yet dark enough to encourage them in hiding their eggs, and also to discourage the idle hens from hunting after the newly laid eggs. You will note the hens enter an entrance

Combined Roosts and Nests.

(C) at back right (or left) hand corner, at the end and into an alley (D) that runs back of the nests (E) and opens into each. On top of the nest is a cleated cover of matched boards that carries an open-faced box without top or bottom, that sets on the cleated cover and in turn supports a cleated cover. In this open box is placed a roost made of two poles nailed to one-by-three-inch strips 24 inches long for supports. At the front edge of cover is fastened a piece of burlap, or strip of blanket, to turn down on very cold nights after the hens are at roost. Large fowls need a cleated board set slanting, in order to walk up to the roost. A small box should be set at the entrance of the nest-boxes.

PROTECT THE YOUNG CHICKS

Put Together Some Thin Boards or Slabs in Form of Crate With Fine Mesh Wire on Top.

The illustration gives an idea how to build a yard for young chicks. Put together some thin boards or slabs in the form of a crate at least two feet high and tack fine mesh wire netting over the sides and top. A small door should be put in one side to allow operator to care for feed and water dishes. The wire yard should be placed tight to the entrance of brooder or coop, and made secure at either side by hooks and staples. Thus the whole outfit may be easily detached, and moved about as the runs become stale, writes Charles R. Bushnell in the Farm and Home. You also have protection for the chickens from crows, hawks and cats, etc.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

A good front hall, four rooms, and a bathroom downstairs, and three rather large bedrooms upstairs, is a brief description of the interior of the house shown in the accompanying design. Looking at it from the southeast corner it appears especially well provided with verandas; and so it is. It is a regular summer resort in the summertime, but the verandas are not wide enough to darken the rooms much in winter. Some people have a horror of an overhanging roof to shut out the little light that nature provides between daylight and dark during the fall and early winter months; but there is a possibility of designing a veranda so it will answer the purpose intended without a corresponding disadvantage.

This is a good, big, square house as dimensions go in these days of high prices—just the kind of house to support a good veranda. In fact, the long veranda gives an air of elegance to what would otherwise be a rather plain exterior. To save expense, the kitchen part is only one story in height, but the house is large enough then for an ordinary family of from four to six adults and children.

A bedroom downstairs is liked by old persons because they object to climbing stairs. This style of house permits the building of a bedroom and bath on the first floor, and still provides for large living rooms conveniently arranged.

Putting the pantry away back in the northwest corner has the advantage of coolness. You cannot have a pantry too cold in a house that is heated by steam, hot water, or warm-air furnace. The arrangement of kitchen, dining room, and pantry must depend to a great extent on the way you want to keep house. If you use a big ice box and take ice the year round, you can manage without a cold pantry; but if you prefer to do ruined by building a new stable. When the fine building was finished, the old horses, harness, rugs and sleighs were not in keeping. He fancied they didn't look well in the new up-to-date stable; so they were sold, and he bought an entire new outfit. The stylish rigs required a stylish coachman—which called for more style—and before he got through with it he found it necessary to sell his fine property, and his pride was such that he could not come down to earth in his native town, so he moved away to a distant city. I don't know just where the moral comes in, but I suppose there is one somewhere if you hunt for it.

I have seen a great deal of nonsense in building. What is very common in one section of the country is a rarely two or three hundred miles
