and good will of the farmer. We all try our best to bring about such a condition and in this way we help to make farming pay.

As a result of our efforts to help the farmer we expect him to do something in return. And when the thought carefully analyzed it will be seen that we are actually asking him to help himself even more than he will be helping us, by doing that which we ask.

We ask the farmer to buy his merchandise at home instead of sending to the big mail order houses for his goods. We believe that he can buy at home just as advantageously as to send his orders out of town and that he will be even better satisfied with his merchandise if he buys of our local storekeepers.

We want to stop their enroachments on local trade. We want to encourage local business men to provide stocks suitable and sufficient for local consumption, but if we send away for the goods we need, then the local business men will become discouraged and decline to invest their money and credit in stocks for our town.

In order to help himself the farmer must help the local merchant. It is only by such reciprocal condition that a community can become prosperous and grow into a bigger community. And it is only by the fact that a farm is located in proximity to a good market that the farm will become more valuable.

Even if a farmer can make a profit on the buying of certain goods from a mail order house, in the end it will mean that he has helped to stultify his home market, which tends to keep down land values. A dull market never made a big town.

In this, we can all help and we are trying to help. The farmers who send their orders to the mail order houses do not think of the effect which their acts have on the community. They do not realize that they are helping to create a sentiment which cannot but injure the financial condition of our home town; a sentiment which interferes with the growth of the community and with the prosperity of every land owner of land.

So, to make farming pay, in both the direct and the indirect way, stand by the townspeople and help local business conditions. Every farmer has a share and an interest in his home town. He is as much affected by the prevailing conditions in the town as he is by the conditions on his own farm. The town cannot have prosperity without his co-operation and he cannot look for prosperity if he does not live in a prosperous community.

Any man can injure his community by failing to co-operate with those whose interests are similar to his own. Short-sightedness may make a man believe that he is not included in this general rule, but few can successfully evade its application.

Make farming pay by helping to "boost" your county town. Do your business with our local storekeeper. You will prosper more in the long run.

Buy your merchandise at home.

TURNER'S ALMANAC BOUGHT BY THE TIMES

Standard North Carolina Almanac, 78 Years Old, to Appear Regularly

The Turner-Ennis Almanac which has been published in Raleigh annually for the past seventy-seven years, has been purchased from the Ennis family by John A. Park, publisher of the Raleigh Times.

Turner's North Carolina Almanac, as it is usually called, was established by Henry D. Turner in 1838. In 1867, James H. Ennis succeeded Mr. Turner and issued the almanac until his death in 1900. From that time until April, 1914, the late Pinck C. Ennis was the owner and publisher. It is sold in practically every town in the entire State of North Carolina; some of the agents now handling the book have been selling it for more than thirty consecutive years.

The 1915 Almanac will contain chronological charts, weather forecasts, complete calendars, movable feast days, rising and setting of sun, and moon season changes, tides, eclipses, and moon's phases. Notes ranged for each month, these features being carefully compiled by prominent authorities. Many practical suggestions appear under the head.

There will be a complete list of all state officers and department employees, with the salaries they are paid, directors of state institutions, commissions, officers and teachers of educational institutions, and federal officers. A feature of the almanac that is always of particular interest to lawyers is the complete court calendar for the entire year, with names of judges and dates of their courts. Household hints, cooking recipes, and the joke columns will be new and enlarged in the 1915 book. A new feature for 1915 which has not appeared in former almanacs, will be a complete record of the various crops in North Carolina for the year, giving quantities and values. The book will be issued by The Times Publishing Company during the month of October.
