What to do After Diphtheria ria carriers." As has been pointed ian Sage—it costs but a trifle. 17-24 out in a previous article, the germs of diphtheria live in the nose, mouth and throat. These germs tend to die rapidly when exposed to the direct rays of the sun or even to pure dry air. As a rule diphtheria is not contracted from houses, sewer pipes, grinking water, furniture, desks, books or other places where the moist secretions of the mouth and nose are Now let us stop and think how the moisture from the mouth of one person is carried to the mouth of another. It is by kissing upon the lips, by the use of common drinking cups, dippers or glasses, by towels, handkerchiefs, sheets and pillow cases, by pencils, coins, marbles, whistles and toys which children pass from mouth to mouth, by careless spitting, by coughing, sneezing or breathing moist breath into the face of another and by handling filthy objects and then putting the fingers into the mouth. Not only diphtheia but other diseases, especially tuberculosis, are spread this way. To prevent diphtheria it is clear that due consideration must be paid to the way in which the disease is spread.

When the disease is present all cups, glasses, spoons and dishes should be boiled immediately on being taken from the sick room. Soft paper, plant bed cloth or clean rags should be used for towels and handkerchiefs, and these should be burn-

Every article of clothing and of hed clothing which is washable should be boiled. When the patient is well enough to leave the room all carpets, rugs, curtains, beds, couches and other articles which cannot be washed should be taken from the house and exposed to the direct rays of the sun for three days. The floors, walls of the room and furniture should be scoured with soap and not water and the room thoroughly aired and dried. Fumigation is useless and unnecessary. Quarantine is continued for two weeks after the patient is well.

> Returns from the election in China show that the proposition to substitute the monarchy for the alleged republic now existing in China, met with overwhelming favor, according to dispatches from Pekin; but with this report comes the statement that the government has decided no change will be made this year. The decision to defer the change was doubtless due to pressure brought by Great Britain, Japan. Russia and France, who feared the possible effect of a change of government in China at this time.
