SAYS ANTS REASON.

More Than Instinct.

New York Times. "Do ants reason?" is an interesting question, which has cropped up again. Hitherto we had such an eminent authority as Lord Avebury expressing his unquestionable belief that they do. This so far back as thirty years ago, and still believes main at that. But now comes along Henry Hill, an equally well informed authority on the insect world, who during a lecture at the London institution, would not allow ants any

"My principal experiment was one in wheih I placed intoxicated ants rear a nest, thirty-eight being friends and forty strangers to the colony. Of the friends twenty-seven were taken into the nest and carefully moat surrounding it and four were alone. Of the strangers thirty were dropped, and nine were taken into the nest. Of the latter seven were again removed from the nest and carried to the water. Could anything more clearly show the reasoning power of the ants?" Lord Avebury gives instances without number which seem to show that ants have a higher power than that of instinct. One of the most rems kible relates to their treatment of the eggs of the aphis, or ant cow. They carefully tend these eggs during the winter, taking them their nests for the purpose, and Sen remove the young aphides, when hatched in the spring, placing them in earthen "cow sheds" specially constructed on the young shoots of the daisy, the plant which provides the cowpeas are good. aphis with nourishment.
