POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

From the Chicago News. Morality does a lot of unnecessary parading in public.

Vocal teachers are always howling about their work.

Some people grumble about everything, be it right or wrong.

Many a man grasps an opportunity to make a fool of himself.

Consider the silent man and the reputation he has for being wise.

And the more advice you give the more likely you are to get in bad.

A girl's idea of a hero is a young man who asks her father for her hand.

Luck seems to have a mania for calling on people who are not expecting it.

Lots of people pose as peacemakers because of the opportunity it affords them to butt in.

It's a pity that the average detective can't locate criminals as easily as he can find clues.

As a matter of fact, a young man is more apt to kiss a girl against her mother's will than against her own.

BOYS' BOOKS UNDER BAN

Action Against American Stories in London Repeated in New York. From the New York Herald.

American books which delighted the youth of the last generation in this country are under the ban in New York, coincident with the action taken against certain American volumes in London.

It is now possible for boys who apply to the children's department of the circulation branches of the New York Library to obtain the Oliver Optic books, nor yet, the narratives by Horatio Alger, Jr., nor the Ralph Hazard books, from the pen of John T. Trobridge. The boys of the Oliver Optic type, accomplished prodigies of valor, in addition to which they reproved their elders. Alger has been supplanted by Ralph Henry Barbour as a maker of hero tales for the young.

As to the books which have been barred from the committee on education of the London common council, none of them can be found in any public library in this city. "From Log Cabin to White House" and "From the Tanyard to the White House" could not be issued here as intellectual pabulum for the young, on the ground that they are too diffuse in their style. Some of the references to Lincoln in the "log cabin" life refer to him familiarly as "Abe," and represent him as standing on a stump when a boy delivering a sermon.

Dr. John S. Billings, director of the New York Public Library, said that he could not understand why such works as "Korea and Her Philip Sidney" should be regarded as containing passage unfit for children to read. Dr. Billings evidently is an admirer of the gallant Sir Philip, for in the library is a life of the English courtier by J. Addington Symonds, which Dr. Billings himself represented to the situation. The character of Sir Philip has been much admired by some writers.

Mrs. Andrew Lang has been writing a series of hero and heroine books, and such compilations are known in England, although the English boy is not stirred as much by the force of example as is his brother on this side of the water. No objection is made here to the life of Sir Isaac Newton nor to Macaulay's "Essay on Lord Clive." The story of Sir Isaac and the apple is well known here, and there are several lives of Lord Clive, which are more or less in demand.

"The story of the Fox," also under the ban, is not issued to the young in this country, and no librarian could be found who had any record of it. The youth of the country may find Macaulay's essay difficult, but they take an interest in his romantic character.

The biography which is in the most demand in New York among the boys is that of Lincoln, while Washington stands second in their favor. All books issued to the young person at the branches of the public library must pass a rigid censorship before they are placed on the shelves.

SOLD HIS SWORD FOR $1

Haitian General Then Adopted Sugar-cane as Emblem of Authority. From the New York Tribune.

Passengers arriving there from Haiti on the Hamburg-American steamship Albatra declared that Port au Prince and other cities on the island were in a state of disorganization akin to revolution. It was the belief of many that unless President Simon takes some drastic action in dealing with the situation many lives will be needlessly sacrificed. According to W. A. Placer, an electrical engineer, of London, who had been on the island for six weeks, the city of Port au Prince is an exceptionally dangerous place for any person who values his life.

"There are only about 90,000 persons in Port au Prince," said Mr. Placer, "and there is more noise in that town than there is in New York. The city is filthy and the pig seems to be the household pet. There are hasty trials of offenders during the day, and the victims are sometimes buried when alive and unconscious. Fresh graves may be seen every day in the cemetery, but no one knows who has been buried until the identity of the victims becomes known through their absence from customary haunts.

"The soldiers are supposed to 12 cents a week, but they seldom get their allowance, and depend almost wholly upon foraging for existence. Organization seems to have disappeared. I saw a general drilling six men with a sword. When I offered him $1 for the sword he sold it eagerly and continued his drilling, substituting a piece of sugarcane for the sword."

Among the Albatra's passengers was Robert Hertzberg, chancellor of the German legation at Port au Prince. He was taken ill about a month ago, and because of the disturbance was unable to find a physician capable of treating him. Becoming worse, he sought the help of a native physician, but after a few days the Haitian doctor disappeared. Mr. Hertzberg sent a servant in search of the doctor and found that he had been put in prison. On learning this the chancellor came to this city for treatment.

Ghost Wants Pact Kept.

Evelyn Sutcliffe, 20 years old, who claims she and Helen Gray, her late chum, has an unbreakable death pact, made her second attempt at suicide. Miss Gray died three weeks ago. The night of her funeral Miss Sutcliffe took an overdose of laudanum. Since then she has been telling her friends that Miss Gray's ghost has come to her almost nightly, telling her to join her in the spirit land.

Miss Sutcliffe took another dose, that almost cost her life, her salvation being her mother's early discovery and a doctor with a stomach pump.
