ASIATICS HAVE FOLK TALES

Popular Stories Prove That Human Nature Is Very Much Alike the World Over.

Some hundreds of years ago there lived in Agshelin, a little town in As.: Minor, an imam, or village parson, the Khoja Nasr-ed-Din Effendi, concernin, whom some interesting tales are told

One day, it appears, a camel passec along the street in which the khoja lived, and one of the khoja's neighbors who had never seen a camel before ran to ask him what this strange beast might be.

"Don't you know what that is?" said the khoja, who also had never seen a camel, but would not betray his ignorance. "That is a hare a thousand years old." A great man once gave a feast, to which, with much condescension, he caused the khoja to be bidden. Accordingly, on the appointed day the khoja repaired to the great man's house and found himself in the midst of a fashionable and richly clad company, which took no notice of the poor imam in his threadbare black gown. No one greeted him or spoke to him. and eventually he was shown by a servant to the lowest seat. After a little, while the khoja slipped away unobserved and went into the hall, where some of the mighty ones had left their outer garments. Selecting a magnificent gown richly lined with fur, he put it on and returned to the room. Nobody recognized this resplendent personage, whose arrival excited universal attention. The company rose to salute him, and the host, Lying and being situate in Oxford who had previously ignored him, approached, bowing, and inquiring after his honorable health.

The khoja stroked the sleeve of his borrowed garment, "Answer, fur," he said,-Milwaukee Sentinel.

LANGUAGE SPOKEN BY FEW

Vagrants in East End of London Us an Ancient Celtic Tongue Among Themselves.

Shelta Thari is a language used secretly among people of the tinker class and principally to be met with in Scotland and Ireland. Its use was first discovered and made known in 1876 by Charles K. Leland, an American antiquarian, and Prof. John Sampson of Liverpool. One day, while walking by the seashore at Aberystwyth, they encountered a tramp who addressed them in an unknown tongue. Both were versed in the Romany or gypsy language and were much surprised to meet one who spoke a tongue of which they knew not a word.

They collected a number of phrases from this man and found on inquiry that he had acquired this strange speech from his wife, who was a tinker. The tinkers, he said, kept their knowledge of the language a secret, speaking it only among themselves. Later Leland encountered many other persons who spoke Shelta. He found that in many of the drinking places in the East end of London, where vagrants often congregate, the language was freely employed, but that when an outsider made his appearance, it ceased at once to be spoken. Scientific methods applied to the study of Shelta proved that it is no mere system of back slang or cant, but an ancient Celtic speech.

Romany, the language of the English gypsies, is still spoken by a large number of persons. Among the majority of them it has become corrupt, but the older gypsy folk still speak what is known as "deep" Romany, that is, the gypsy language in its pure state. The dialect of Shetland, although its grammar is Lowland Scotch, is very largely Norse and as spoken by the Shetlanders among themselves is scarcely understandable by the average Scotsman. On the Isle of Man, a Celtic tongue different from Gaelic or Welch is still used by a number of the
